Restaurants

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef —a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508 628 0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

LIVING LARGE, HOBBIT-STYLE

Pop quiz: The "Land of the Long White Cloud" is:

A) Northern New Jersey

B) Where Puff the Magic Dragon hangs out

C) New Zealand

If you guessed A or B, you might have a point, but the correct answer is C, and give yourself extra credit if you can pronounce Aotearoa, the name the native Maori gave the pair of islands that people generally think of as Australia's nasal little sibling, or the place where they made all those Hobbit movies.

"The beauty of New Zealand is unlike the beauty of any other place on earth," the woman who sits next to me at the symphony said when I told her I was going. I was willing to believe her, too, although I wasn't sure I'd be able to handle the accent. I once had a yoga instructor from Christchurch whose class I stopped taking because I laughed whenever he said, "Brayth innn throo the nee-oze, brayth eenet throo the nee-oze."

I'm pleased to say the accent barely registered, though, possibly because the people were so unfailingly friendly. Upon arriving on the North Island, it was still early enough in the season to take a (quick) dip in the Pacific, which I did at Kauri Cliffs, a rustic-chic luxury lodge perched on a dramatic escarpment, encompassing a semi-tropical stretch of coastline that we explored on horseback. From years of experience, I know that golf is the triumph of an unreasonably small ball over instruments uniquely ill-suited to hitting it, but I would have played 18 holes there if only for the views over Matauri Bay... plus the fact that a resident goat rides along in the golf cart. Instead, I opted for a drive to the seaside paradise of Mangonui, for a lunch of fish 'n' chips so fatteningly good I'm glad they're a 19-hour flight away.

From the tip of the North Island, we flew down the coast to the volcanic wonderland of Lake Taupo, stopping for a leisurely (and boozy) lunch at the tartan-bedecked, Balmoral-like Huka Lodge, where Queen Elizabeth is a regular and where King Willem of the Netherlands brought the bodacious Queen Maxima for their honeymoon.

A few hours' drive away is Hawke's Bay, home of some superb wineries and the Farm at Cape Kidnappers—an absurdly luxurious 6,000-acre eco-ranch with a main lodge straight out of Elle Decor, a golf course that would make any Masters winner weep, and two completely unique attractions: the mainland's largest colony of gannets (essentially, fancy seagulls) and a private kiwi sanctuary.

Despite being nicknamed "kiwis," most New Zealanders have only seen one of the flightless, nocturnal birds in captivity. Guests at the Farm, however, can walk through the woods, radio tracking and actually holding one of the endangered species, and, as in my case, having it loose its bowels all over them. If being shat on by a bird is good luck, I'm betting it's doubly lucky coming from one of the world's rarest.

As any adrenaline junkie or movie director will tell you, the world capital of outdoorsiness is Queenstown, a swanky playpen for skiers, hikers, rafters, bikers and fishermen in the heart of the South Island. From my suite at the Bauhaus-but-cozy Matakauri Lodge, I had a gut-punching view over Lake Wakatipu of the Remarkables—a mountain range so aptly named that one can forgive its immodesty.

"Not wanting to neglect our livers, we did a tasting lunch at a vineyard outside of Arrowtown."

The Dart River Valley extends south from Queenstown, through jagged peaks that have stood in for every dramatic locale, both real and imagined, in every other movie you've seen over the past 10 years. Hiking through a primeval forest, we came upon a Lord of the Rings prop—Bilbo Baggins' chair—that Peter Jackson left behind. Our jet-boat ride, meanwhile, put any amusement park to shame, speeding along shallow riverbeds, doing 360s and otherwise handling like something Q developed for the climactic chase sequence of a James Bond movie.

Not wanting to neglect our livers, we did a tasting lunch at a vineyard outside of Arrowtown, and we were preparing to chopper up and drive golf balls off a glacier when bad weather grounded us. In fact, if there's one thing the people of Queenstown enjoy more than outdoor adventure, it's outdoor adventure that incorporates the use of a helicopter.

It's impossible to describe all the wonders we saw, and they were only a fraction of what the tiny country has up its sleeve. But suffice it to say that for the rest of my life, every time I see a movie with eye-popping scenery, I'm likely to say, "Looks like New Zealand." ■

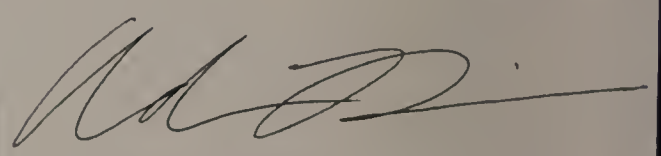
LAND GRAB

ANYONE WHO'S TRIED TO BUY A home in Boston—or, foolish mortal! rent one—knows that the local real estate market is a ravenous beast that chews up dreams and inspection fees and spits out psychiatric damage. I've been trawling the listings for months now, with about as much success as I'd have finding an affordable Rembrandt. A typical scene on the Sunday afternoon open-house circuit:

"Honey, the asbestos in the closet is audibly fizzing."

"I thought that was the sound of the sinkhole downstairs. Did you know the basement's a protected wetland?"

"We could fit a twin mattress in here if we moved the chimney out of the middle of the room, corked up the baboon nest and built an illegal extension."



"Yeah, I'd call a contractor for an estimate, but the lead paint blocks my cellphone signal. What does the info sheet say about the school district?"

"One word: Poxed."

"Let's only offer $25,000 above asking price."

You could blame the hyperventilating market on scapegoats like rich foreign buyers, greedy developers and a huge-ass ocean hogging up all the real estate to the east. But the fact is that too many people need to squeeze into too few houses near the same overstuffed subway stations. We are not meerkats. If we were, we could all burrow our own three-bed/1.5-bath holes within walking distance of a Trader Joe's. It would be better if we were meerkats.

Or we could all move into microapartments, according to Jacqueline Houton's fine exploration of the subject (p. 44). And, once ensconced, you'd be advised to ask interior designer Taniya Nayak how to make the most of your space (p. 40).

ART CONSULTANT AND BLOGGER AMELIA EICHHOLZ »»

FINER THINGS

ATTENTION GRABBER: Art consultant Amelia Eichholz says to be patient while searching for a work you love.

Collect Yourself

After a few gigs in the art world, including working with Boston artist Rachel Perry Welty and Samson Gallery, School of the Museum of Fine Arts graduate Amelia Eichholz launched her own art consulting business, Colour Bloc. Whether they're in living rooms, offices or restaurants, blank walls are now her canvas of choice. Here's an art lesson, courtesy of the specialist herself.

WHERE ART THOU

Visit local galleries, like Steven Zevitas and Howard Yezerski, and stop by First Fridays and Open Studios to find inspiration. "Most artists and owners are more than happy to answer questions about any displayed artwork," Eichholz notes, adding it's important to be patient with the process in order to end up with pieces you love.

ON DISPLAY

"Framing is expensive, but always worth it," Eichholz explains. To further show off your investment, install lighting above artwork to draw viewers' attention.

ONE OF A KIND

If you're in the market for something particularly special, Eichholz will contract an artist to create a piece all your own. "It's important for my clients to feel like they have a piece that is unique to them and their taste," she says. After drawing up an inspiration board, clients check in halfway through the project for feedback so that it's always commission accomplished. / Sarah Hagman

BLISS WITH BENEFITS

PHILANTHROPY IS ON THE MENU

TRUNK SHOW: Bob Perry at the Elephant Walk in Waltham

IT'S NOT EXACTLY NEWS WHEN A restaurateur supports a worthy cause: After all, benefit dinners and galas dot the calendar all year. But Bob Perry, who's owned the Elephant Walk restaurants for more than 20 years, is taking a different approach with his forthcoming Bliss Diner, located two doors down from his Cambodian and French eatery in Waltham.

Bliss will be the second of what Perry, working with business partner Mike Millea, describes as "two restaurants hitched to a social mission." It's called the Benefit Restaurant Project, and participating eateries donate a percentage of all sales to nonprofit organizations, especially those working to mitigate poverty. Share Our Strength and City Year are two of the organizations that have benefited from the $180,000 raised since the Elephant Walk piloted the project four years ago.

Mike Millea

Although Perry has an ambitious goal—he envisions national participation, ultimately including a thousand restaurants—right now he's focusing on expanding the Elephant Walk from 85 to 150 seats and building a team for Bliss, which will open sometime this fall. "We'll take diner food, make it more connected to local producers," Perry says. "We have to do bacon and eggs, pancakes, waffles..." Waffles? Maybe sweetened with the house-made lemongrass syrup used by the Elephant Walk in desserts and cocktails?

"We're well along that road," says Perry, who adds that the still-in-development menu will reflect the rich cultural diversity of Waltham during breakfast and lunch. Bliss, he sums up, will serve "comforting, inspiring food, warm and from the heart," in "a sanctuary from the craziness of the outside world." Bliss indeed.

FINANCIAL INDUSTRY

WAREHOUSE HOPES TO SPORT A CROWD

IN THE SHADOWY STREETS OF THE Financial District, Warehouse Bar & Grille, a new restaurant from the husband-and-wife team behind Battery Park Bar & Lounge, aims to blend in with the business crowd. The industrial vibe looks like the owners patterned it after one of the sets from the cult classic Boiler Room, while the menu—with an emphasis on healthier fare—is a call to attract the calorie conscious.

Since the area's so heavily populated with Irish pubs, owners Cliff and Toni Dever decided to position Warehouse as a sports bar with an eye for lunch break. "We hope it's a lot different from any venue down here," Cliff Dever says. To that end, the menu remains unchanged from midday onward. Aside from the perennial shareable plates, salads and sandwiches, there's a nod to the Cajun roots of one of the eatery's investors, with alligator bites as an appetizer as well as alligator and sausage gumbo as an entree. For carbo-phobes, all of the burgers are available in lettuce wraps. Nathaniel Durost is the executive chef, and his previous experience in the bustling kitchen at Stephanie's on Newbury is ideal training for any lunch crunch.

As for a crunch at the bar, Toni Dever hopes Warehouse can make a mark with its unique wine list. While many local venues have started offering a wine on tap, Warehouse offers eight—four whites and four reds. The reduction in packaging and waste is a plus for the owners, while for customers it can mean a fresher pour and cheaper prices ($8-$9 per glass). To further lure the after-work drinkers, there are 23 craft beers available by the can, in addition to 12 draft lines and a mix of cocktails.

With its monochrome aesthetic and overhanging pipes, Warehouse lives up to its name. The look was inspired by a trip to IKEA, where the Devers saw a simple, little grass plant in a stainless steel container. These now adorn every table.

"There's a lot of metal, raw industrial elements," Cliff Dever says. "It's barebones." ◆

Q&A HEART SMARTS

Author and Found Magazine creator Davy Rothbart reads from his relationship memoir, My Heart Is an Idiot, at Porter Square Books on Sept. 26.

WHAT'S THE WEIRDEST THING THAT'S EVER BEEN SUBMITTED TO FOUND? We get a lot of weird ones, that's for sure. Sometimes there are just these notes that are just kind of cryptic and bizarre. There's so little information that it's almost hard to construct a story about how this thing might have come to be. So, for example, this one note said in big marker, "More buns, more cups, less lies." I thought that was kind of amazing. And then from San Francisco came one; it just said, "It stayed on the grill, bitch!!!" Then there was a jar filled with formaldehyde and containing a sea lamprey, like an eel, that was found in Northern Michigan, and on the lid of the jar was a Post-It note that said, "Flaky and self conscious." Every day there's one that moves you to tears, makes you laugh out loud or completely baffles you.

IN YOUR BOOK, YOU LOGGED A LOT OF TRAVEL TIME MEETING UP WITH GIRLS. WHY DIDN'T THEY EVER TRAVEL TO YOU? I've been traveling so much the past 10 years with Found Magazine, doing events, traveling around the country and sharing the project with people, that I've just met a lot of women I had the hots for, or felt some kind of soulful connection with. But you're right, what's up with that? How come I'm always the one hopping on a Greyhound bus or hitchhiking across the country to chase down some woman who won't even give me the time of day? I'm just going to sit back and wait for them to come to my front door. That might be a long wait.

IS THERE ANYTHING YOU WOULDN'T DO FOR LOVE? I don't think I would sell out a friend.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR TYPE? If I had to pick one type, it's kind of this sad, otherworldly, desolate beauty. I don't know why sadness is so intoxicating. I guess maybe when you see somebody who has a certain sadness, or strangeness even, you feel like maybe they could understand those parts of you that another girl might not understand. / Hannah Sheinberg

SEW STYLISH

When it comes to updos, we're going from pins to needles. Hair stitching eliminates the use of bobby pins completely, simply using a needle and thread to craft the same coiffe. SalonCapri stylist Graziella Lembo, one of the few who offers the service in Boston, says the convenient style is also durable. "It holds all night. I have one client with a ton of hair—this is the only thing that has held for her, which is amazing," Lembo says. The process takes an average of 15 to 20 minutes and results in a romantic, soft-textured updo perfect for a benefit gala or a bridal party. To create the look, Lembo curls the entire head using a curling wand, then separates the hair into sections and loops the needle and thread through the curls. For an extra sparkle, she'll occasionally substitute gold or silver thread. At the end of the night, all you have to do is cut the thread and let the curls fall where they may. / Coryn Doncaster

Bagelsaurus Bagels S[illegible]

If you've had one of the killer Taza Chocolate brownies at Cutty's, you already know that baker Mary Ting Hyatt is the real deal. But it's her latest project, a microbakery called Bagelsaurus, that's going to make her a household name and Cutty's a destination for more than just sandwiches. The handmade bagels—for now a Friday and Saturday morning-only special—boast a bubbly crumb, a crackly exterior and sourdough-based complexity. They're more akin to a quality rustic loaf than anything from New York or Montreal. Before baking, she dips some in seeds and others in a lye solution that turns the baked results into pretzel bagels—to date, our favorite flavor with a side of mustard butter. Stay tuned: Bialys may be on the way. / Elizabeth Bomze

Drink of the Moment
BONAPARTE

PRICE: $16

INVENTOR: Bistro du Midi's head sommelier, Todd Lipman

INGREDIENTS: Courvoisier VS, Licor 43, Mathilde Pear Liqueur, two dashes of chocolate bitters, one dash of Angostura bitters, orange rind garnish

GALLICISM: Pretty authentic, but the Spanish Licor 43 gives it a Mediterranean inflection. Or maybe it's just a nod to the Peninsular War.

TASTE: Orange rind on the nose melds into the cognac, which is pillowed by the gently sweet fruit of the Mathilde Pear. Vanilla from the Licor 43 accents the Courvoisier's wood notes, and the Angostura kicks in midpalate, intensifying the texture. A back-end bitterness from the chocolate deepens the complexity. Masterfully balanced, this is a drink for quiet study.

BISTRO DU MIDI
272 Boylston St., Boston (617-426-
bistrodumidi.com

INSPIRATION: "I was thinking about something that embraces the intense flavors of the season," Lipman says. "And I thought about what cognac is." It is, in general, a consistent, high-quality spirit.*

PAIR IT WITH: "Based on its lightly sweet character, this is a cognac drink that could be enjoyed before a meal," observes Lipman. Or pair it with the robust bone-in rib-eye served au poivre with arugula and white peaches.

BAR PHILOSOPHY: "The menu embraces classic techniques," Lipman says. "Cognac definitely has its place here." Also, there's the regional bent. "Provence evokes lemon, Pernod, thyme. Sitting on the Mediterranean." Hence the Midi cocktail, made with gin, lemon juice and sparkling rosé.

* Take, for example, the Hennessy Ellipse, a blend of the best vintages from the past 200 years, available at the bar for $531. Per glass. / Andrew Rimas

FRENCH SIP: Lipman pours a Bonaparte.

Purveyors: Felt Better

Until recently, the only experience Jennifer Feller and Sam Palmer had working with fleece was from the part-time jobs they once held folding clothes at a local Patagonia store. Then Sam, a former surfboard designer, started fashioning pressed-felt bowls from fleece scraps in the couple's Arlington basement, and they realized they could put excess textiles to good use. The company born from that idea, ReFleece sells a full line of colorful, durable two-layer tablet and e-reader cases made with upcycled fabrics from companies like Patagonia and Woolrich, and they plan to launch new products—additional phone cases, home accessories and possibly a travel bag—early in 2014. / Elizabeth Bomze

Blanc Check

Alsace pinot blancs are one of my all-purpose, go-to wines. Moderate in price, they're invariably delicious and provide a lively start to a meal: fresh, dry and smooth with hints of crisp minerality that develop after a few years in the bottle. Like the far better known pinot grigio, a fine pinot blanc is mild in personality but flashes a bit more acid as well as more roundness and flesh. Subtle is the operative word; oak is rarely, if ever, used. What's not to like? These are my three current blind-tasting favorites.

WILLY GISSELBRECHT PINOT BLANC, 2012
A family of grape growers since the 17th century, Gisselbrecht remains a small 42-acre artisan estate that produces apple wines with fragrant spring fruit and delicate herb-like aromas. Fresh and peachy on the palate, this pinot blanc's round texture is balanced with slightly bitter stone-fruit and spice flavors. It's a somewhat "bigger," more assertive style that will stand up to shrimp and other shellfish dishes as well as richer fare, like ...

HUGEL "CUVÉE LES AMOURS" PINOT BLANC, 2009
Another venerable house that dates to the 17th century, Hugel makes one of the best-selling pinot blancs in the U S Delicate, refined and well structured, this is aromatically more developed because of its greater bottle age With green apple, pear, nutmeg and delicate floral undertones, it has a richly textured but refreshing palate-cleansing minerality I recently enjoyed this immensely with sole Veronique, a classic poached fish preparation garnished with grapes ...

KUENTZ-BAS PINOT BLANC, 2010
Relative newcomers in the region (Kuentz-Bas was established in 1795), this 25-acre estate sits at one of the highest elevations in Alsace. A blend 70 percent pinot blanc and 30 percent Auxerrois, a related grape with a slightly richer and spicier character, this has a yeasty, vanilla-influenced aroma, with ripe apple, floral and lemon notes. Creamy and lush, it benefitted from the cool, long 2010 growing season in Alsace, which lent finesse and a balanced intensity It's an ideal choice for wood-grilled sea scallops or crab cakes. ...

WALK & TALK

To the college students on Boylston: OH MY GOD, YOU'RE ALL BACK. YAY! Yes, we are excited, too, but can you all reunite off to the side of the sidewalk? It's very hard to walk through your flailing and shrieking. Thanks.

The welcome committee

To ANYONE who finds it necessary to apply perfume, hand sanitizer or hand lotion on the T: The doors have closed, and I'm standing in front of you while you sit comfortably reading your book. You are now two stops from where you need to get off, as am I, and you decide to apply not just hand sanitizer, but hand lotion as well, while I am standing in front of you choking on the aroma of both. Have a heart! Wait until you get off the train. You could cause me to keel over next time.

Allergic

To the woman shouting in this morning's Starbucks line: Was it really so necessary to take that call loud enough to hear across the shop? It's even almost excusable that you felt the need to share the whole conversation with us. I get that sometimes a call can't wait, I get that you're just great at projecting, but when your call interferes with the speed of the line, you've crossed it. Next time, put the phone down for 30 seconds and please, please, please don't tell the barista to hold on.

The rest of the Starbucks line

To the man who gave us a free concert on the T: I understand that you've had a long day at work and that it's nice to spend your commute listening to music. But should you really listen to it so loudly that I can hear it from across the train car? Even worse is that one earbud is in your ear and the other is propped above it, blasting out to the rest of us.

Unwilling listener

To the bros at the MFA: It drives me crazy when you sit there with your bros nudging and giggling at Matisse's nudes. This is a museum, and your behavior is not only extremely loud, it's incredibly rude to the rest of us. If you are so uncomfortable with the human form, please go back to your Xbox and leave the culture to the rest of us.

Irritated art lover

To the man handing out papers at the entrance to the Copley T stop: Thank you for being the first thing I see on my way to work every day. I never have time to take your paper, but you are always so kind and happy to everyone emerging from underground. You clearly take your job seriously and are not discouraged easily. It's very encouraging, and I appreciate it immensely.

OLD-SCHOOL COMICS

A DIFFERENT SORT OF TAKE ON THE 18TH CENTURY

TAXES, THE TEA PARTY, AND THOSE REVOLTING REBELS: A HISTORY IN COMICS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION* by Stan Mack
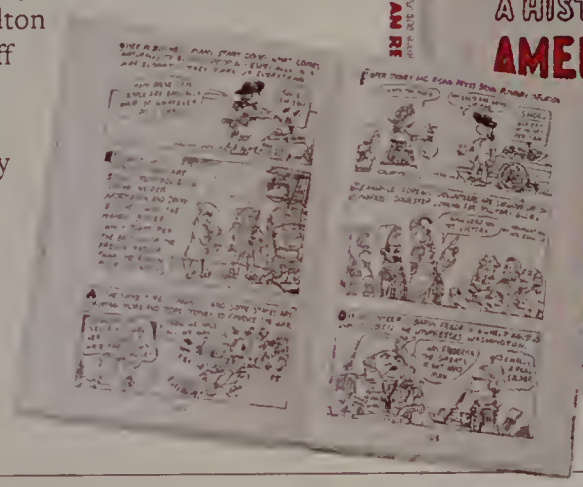
Published by NBM, 176 pages, $14.99 hardcover



A graphic take on Boston—and American—history.

IN A LIVELY AND LARGELY IRREVERENT WAY, former Village Voice cartoonist Stan Mack gives us American history from 1761 through the Declaration of Independence and on to the Bill of Rights. Along the way he draws insecure chubby King George III and George Washington, whose severe, Southern-aristocratic ways characterized his career.

While portraying the rich and the poor colonists in vivid drawings and joke-rich dialogue, Mack conveys the ironic zigs and zags in which people working together for independence had very different outlooks and agendas. Slavery persisted, native cultures were destroyed and poor whites weren't treated equally (nor were women). There are scenes of ignominy, like the Triangular Trade in which colonists exchanged rum for slaves, and heroism, like Henry Knox dragging cannons from Fort Ticonderoga to Boston.

A boyishly drawn character on the sidelines critically comments on the many contradictions. (For instance, Alexander Hamilton and John Adams had a whiff of the king about them and saw the common people as "beasts.") And we get lively depictions of the Boston Massacre and Tea Party, rumblings foreshadowing the Revolutionary War.

This book revives and rearranges what you learned in school. ◆

The pronunciation is roughly "San Bardt," and it's worth the attempt to get it right, because it's a point about which the locals are unflinchingly French.

The local currency is the euro, and with the exchange rate becoming increasingly kind to the dollar, the island isn't as prohibitively expensive as many people assume.

High season runs from mid-December to early spring, so there are deals to be found during the dreary days at the end of April or the first cold blasts of November.

FRENCH CONNECTION: St. Barth, one of the islands in the French West Indies, offers more than just celeb spotting.

The Escape Artist / Jonathan Soroff

BARTH OF GOLD

SAVOR THE MELLOW SIDE OF ST. BARTH

WHEN MOST PEOPLE THINK OF St. Barth, they picture Jay-Z and Beyoncé throwing a week-long party on a mega-yacht anchored off the Eden Rock Hotel, with a new DJ being flown in nightly from London or Los Angeles.

That does happen, especially between Christmas and New Year's. But one of the most name-dropped islands in the French West Indies has a quieter, more relaxing and altogether less flashy side. It's possible to spend the day on the beach, have dinner at home, play a board game and be asleep in your mosquito-netted bed before the first tin of caviar is opened on that Russian oligarch's hilltop terrace.

The island's exclusive airline, Tradewind, flies from San Juan (as well as St. Thomas and Antigua). And if you've ever landed on the island, you know you'd rather have a local pilot, since the approach is like an amusement park ride and the landing strip is about as long as a suburban driveway.

One of the best ways to experience the mellower side of St. Barth is renting a villa from a management company like Sibarth, which has an inventory that ranges from classic Caribbean to Swedish minimalist to Madonna-would-stay-here. For an Italian billionaire, they handle an ultra-modern five-bedroom Ibiza-style folly called Villa Vitti, with portholes into the swimming pool and a fully tricked-out disco in the basement. Then there are cozy one-bedroom nooks overlooking St. Jean Bay, where the water is so lullingly calm that you can actually nod off while floating on your back.

Sibarth offers 12-star service, like stocking your home away from home with Hermès toiletries (on which they have an island exclusive), Champagne and groceries in the fridge, and anything else, 24/7. At Christmastime, they'll even decorate a tree for you using your own ornaments, if you send them ahead. This leaves you free to enjoy the land of infinity pools and tropical views framed by jasmine and bougainvillea.

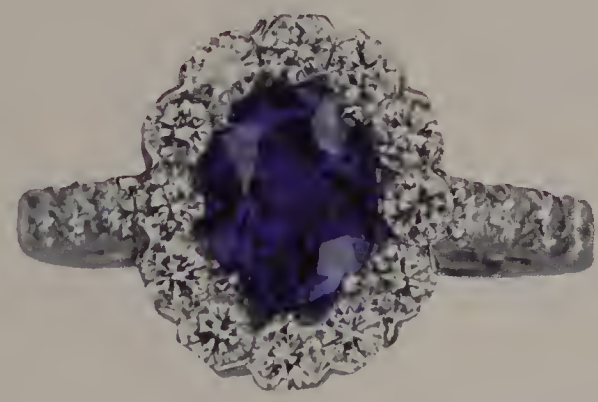
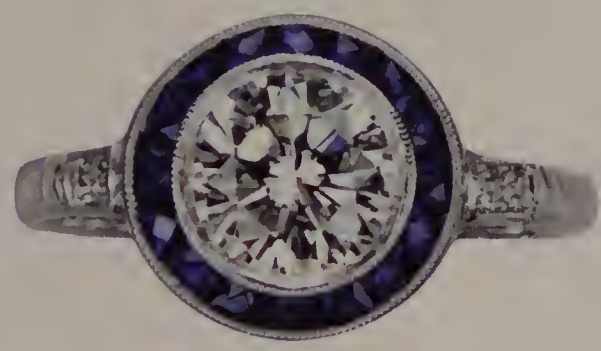
If faced with the choice of whether to read a book in a hammock at home or go to the beach, note that St. Barth is ringed by 14 of the southern hemisphere's finest. The aforementioned St. Jean is the one to go to if you want cafes, cabanas and cocktails. Saline and Gouverneur are more remote, and in the offseason they're so sparsely populated that even the most modest person might be tempted by the fact that they're clothing optional.

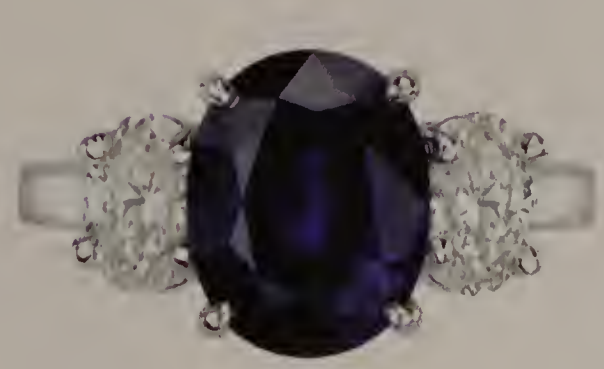
A French island means French cooking, and you could stay for a month and eat at a different superb restaurant every night. Three the locals swear by are Eddy's, l'Isola and Maya. The first is a low-key, family-friendly spot in the main town of Gustavia, presided over by the bearded and charming Eddy himself, who can tell you the name of the guy who caught the fish you're eating. The second is an upscale Italian eatery owned by Fabrizio Bianconi, one of the partners of the wildly acclaimed Via Veneto in Santa Monica. The last, on the water outside of town, is named for the Martinique-born, Guadeloupe-raised and France-schooled chef whose husband and partner grew up on Nantucket, and doesn't miss it much.



One place where you're almost certain to avoid the Louboutin-wearing crowd is Colombier Beach, which requires a hike from Flamands along a goat path and is arguably the island's best spot for snorkeling. For more solitude, there's the wild southeast coast, Anse Toiny, where the famously aloof Rudolf Nureyev built a dacha-style beach house with a famous teak deck where he could dance with the waves crashing just below his feet. Nearby is the five-star restaurant Le Gaiac, along with shabby-chic beach cafes where you can dig your toes in the sand while sipping a superior rosé.



Strolling through Gustavia—with its hybrid of Caribbean sailing town and ultra-luxe cosmopolitanism—you might spot a yellow submarine in the harbor, or tarpon swarming by the docks, as well as tags by famed New York street artist Alec Monopoly. Likewise, international brands like Cartier have boutiques that blend in among local ateliers, art galleries and artisans' studios. French boutiques like La Chemise Tropézienne sell beach shoes you can put in the washing machine but would still look fine at a cocktail party on Beacon Hill. Right in the heart of town is Le Select, the laid-back burger joint where Jimmy Buffet wrote "Cheeseburger in Paradise" (no matter what all those people in Florida claim). It's this mixture of high and low that make Gustavia perhaps the only place on the planet where the $41,000 hammock hanging in the window at Louis Vuitton seems more quaint than obnoxious.



At heart, St. Barth is the antithesis of flamboyant. Flaunting one's wealth and ostentatious displays of any sort are considered gauche and déclassé in the extreme, even if the sheets on your bed are from D. Porthault. It's part of the dichotomous charm of the island, where the absolute finest coexists with the completely chill. ◆

BROOKLINE GETS ITS OWN OUTPOST OF THE SOUTH END'S EL CENTRO.

EL CENTRO DOS
236 Washington St., Brookline (617-232-4200)
elcentroboston.com

MEXICAN-FOOD LOVERS HAVE A LOT to be grateful for these days. Just a few years back, locals craving spice and salsa would be hard-pressed to find more than overstuffed burritos and syrupy margaritas throughout town. Mexican-style fare has since made a grand entrance on the scene, from the Seaport's sprawling Temazcal and Rosa Mexicano to the dramatically decorated Lolita in Back Bay, chef Michael Schlow's Barrio Cantina near Fenway and three colorful Papagayo locations.

Intimacy and authenticity are still in short supply, however, taking a backseat to flash and fun. So when tiny El Centro opened two years ago in the South End, serving up taqueria favorites and specialties from owner Allan Rodriguez's hometown of Hermosillo, Mexico, the petite, mural-bedecked boite quickly drew raves.

Now Brookline gets a taste. El Centro Dos debuted in late June in a former Brookline Village real estate office. It's somewhat quieter than the South End spot, but that likely reflects its more mellow environs than any shortcomings in the kitchen, which hummed along nicely on a few recent visits. Rodriguez's menu is the same pages-long list as at the original El Centro, divided into appetizers, antojitos (typical street foods), house specialties, veggie options, tacos and molcajete dishes cooked in hot lava stone.

To get a meal off on the right foot, skip the undersalted ancho chile salsa that's brought out with chips and instead order the guacamole with chorizo ($9), a generous portion of creamy dip sprinkled with spicy crumbled sausage. Then move on to sopes ($6), a corn-dough tartlet served in a petite cast-iron skillet under a mound of lettuce and cheese. It's not pretty, but the sharp contrast between the cool toppings and crisp, hot and subtly sweet corn fritter make it one of the appetizer menu's stars.

Antojitos, the Mexican street foods, fall somewhere between app and entree in size. A hefty plate of enfrijoladas oaxaquenas ($14) hardly seems like something to wolf down roadside, but you'd be wise to try anyway. Its cheese-stuffed tortillas are cloaked by a blanket of mashed black beans and sour cream and topped with chunky salsa and avocado. It's a dense fork-and-knife dish, with a surprising kick of pepper that sneaks up and lingers. The shrimp ceviche ($11), on the other hand, was both unappealing and uninspired, the chunks of seafood, onion and pepper floating in a soupy pool of bland broth.

While tacos al pastor and the crisp-fried and cabbage-topped fish tacos (both $5) are perfectly tasty, seek out the less familiar varieties. Both the caramelos and the Lorenza tacos (both $5) come on a homemade tortilla that's been charcoal-grilled, which makes them both impossible to fold and entirely delicious. Had they been accompanied by wedges of lime for a hint of brightness, they'd be perfect.

You'll get more of those great tortillas if you order the Sonoran-style charcoal-grilled skirt steak entree ($22), an enormous fat-streaked cut charred to an excellent crust. Use them to wrap up slices of the tender meat with the accompanying guacamole and fresh salsa. Camarones Papantla ($22), also known as bacon-wrapped shrimp, were supposed to come stuffed with cheese, but it was undetectable—a blessing, perhaps, given the richness of the dish as is. Just one or two of the prawns would make for a terrific appetizer (or party snack).

El Centro keeps its drink list relatively simple. There are five types of sangria on hand, along with nine Mexican beers and a few wines. Tequilas are available in shot and margarita form, and they'll gladly make a spicy beer-based michelada. Given the full liquor license, which the original El Centro lacks, though, it seems a shame not to see a few more creative cocktails on this location's menu.

At press time, Rodriguez was reportedly readying a third El Centro in Belmont set to open this fall. Can the concept work in triplicate, or will it take on a bit of chain-y sameness? We'll see. For now, two's company—and good company at that. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: IS THERE A WAY TO REMOVE MY LOVE HANDLES WITHOUT SURGERY OR LIPOSUCTION?

A: Yes! There are wonderful new technologies available that safely melt away unwanted body fat using either ultrasound or radio waves. At SkinHealth our clients have been happy with both types of non-surgical fat reduction.

If you have an extra inch or two, or would like to jump-start a more serious slim-down, these are great treatments to consider. Our treatments utilize either ultrasound or radio frequency energy to stimulate and agitate the targeted fat cells, causing those cells to empty their contents and shrink back to their original size.

These body contouring methods are ideally suited for women and men who have unwanted fat around the waist, love handles, buttocks, upper arms and thighs.

The treatments are comfortable, they feel like a warm massage, and are safe, pain-free, and there is no recovery or downtime.

Movies / Sean Burns

BACKSEAT DRIVER

IN RUSH, RON HOWARD TAKES AUDIENCES BEHIND THE SCENES OF 1970S F1 RACING.

RUSH* ★★★

Starring Chris Hemsworth, Daniel Brühl, Olivia Wilde and Alexandra Maria Lara. Written by Peter Morgan. Directed by Ron Howard. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs

THE GREAT THING ABOUT RON HOWARD movies is that nobody's ever in danger of missing the point. For the widest audience possible, the artist, formerly known as Opie, pitches slow-balls over the plate. His movies match his offscreen persona; gregarious, hardworking and a little bland. At their worst—which is quite often—Howard's pictures put the middle into middlebrow. These are safe, earnest and entirely unmemorable commercial exercises. Apparently the only child star who grew up sane, Ron Howard is one of the industry's favorite sons, and something of a pariah in serious-minded film-buff circles.

But if you forget about The Grinch and those Da Vinci Code movies, he's not really a bad filmmaker. Unlike his sitcom co-stars Penny Marshall and Rob Reiner, who also dominated that weird 1990s vortex during which Richie Cunningham, Laverne DeFazio and Meathead were placed at the helm of Oscar contenders, Howard at least seems to take his craft seriously. Every six or seven years he even comes up with something fairly decent.

Rush is one of the good ones. This propulsive piece of mythmaking follows the famous 1976 rivalry between Formula One racers Niki Lauda (Daniel Brühl) and James Hunt (Chris Hemsworth). OK, so "famous" might be a little bit of an overstatement on these shores, since F1 is apparently one of those things, like soccer or Jude Law, that is a huge deal overseas but nobody here pays much mind about.

Which is a shame, because you come out of this picture thinking NASCAR is for sissies. Speeding around the track during appalling weather conditions in what basically amounts to a rickety go-kart strapped with tanks of rocket fuel, these hotshots boast about the fact that at least two of them die every year. (Speaking as someone who drives like an old lady, these races look like suicide attempts. I'm told that Formula One safety regulations have been tightened up considerably during the decades after which this film takes place.)

Speaking as someone who drives like an old lady, these races look like suicide attempts.

For all intents and purposes, a philosophical argument takes place at 140 mph. Rush pits Brühl's no-nonsense, disciplined Lauda against Hemsworth's swaggering, womanizing Hunt during a championship season full of so many surprises you'd think the writer was a hack if this all hadn't actually happened. Lauda is a crumpled homunculus who insults everyone within earshot and trumpets his superior intellect. Hunt is played by Thor, so he looks cool, isn't very bright and gets laid every 15 seconds. But behind the wheel, they're evenly matched.

Screenwriter Peter Morgan sets the stage for a high-octane riff on Amadeus, with Lauda's intense preparations undone time and again by Hunt's nonchalant, instinctive genius. Except the movie doesn't pan out quite the way you'd expect. For starters, Howard has a deep strain of empathy for the workaholic, unloved Niki Lauda. Brühl, who you might remember as the propaganda superstar of Quentin Tarantino's Inglourious Basterds, throws himself into the role as if determined to alienate the audience, throwing out cocky assertions about his superiority as if they were matters of fact, undercutting affection at every turn.

Lauda despises the gifted playboy Hunt because everything seems to come so easy for him, and as Rush wears on, it's hard not to read a personal angle into the portrayal. Howard has been a workhorse, directing 21 pictures over the past 30 years and producing god knows how many others, but he's never been considered "sexy" or "cool." The movie feels like an exorcism of the famously milquetoast director's resentment at his flashier, more acclaimed peers. At one point, Brühl's Lauda even implores Hemsworth's Hunt to go to bed early for a change, reminding me of Clint Eastwood's 1988 film Bird, in which the director tried to make a biopic about Charlie Parker but couldn't help siding with Dizzy Gillespie when it came to all that tortured artist nonsense.

Morgan is not a writer known for subtlety. Much like his Oscar-nominated screenplays for The Queen and Frost/Nixon, Rush does not believe in subtext. The characters stand around eloquently articulating the movie's themes in lieu of dialogue. But Howard has so many ants in his pants that the jabber is less distracting than usual.

Shot by the groundbreaking digital videographer Anthony Dod Mantle and cut into concussive mini-scenes by editor Daniel P. Hanley, this sucker moves. How soon we forget Ron Howard's first directorial effort was Roger Corman's Grand Theft Auto, and he still has a trick or two up his sleeve when it comes to cars going vroom, vroom. Thuddingly obvious and proud of it, Rush is slick, breakneck entertainment. ◆

BIFFY CLYRO
plays the Brighton Music Hall on Oct. 2

Music / Paul Robicheau

FAMILY STRONG

ONE OF THE U.K.'S MOST EXPLOSIVE BANDS SIDESTEPS ITS NAME TO FIND ITS STATESIDE NICHE.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE A POND MAKES. When the band Biffy Clyro headlined the closing night of England's venerable Reading Festival last month, a crowd of about 90,000 sang along to every word as fireworks shot into the sky. But on this side of the Atlantic, rock fans would more likely respond "Biffy who?" as the Scottish rockers dispense with pyrotechnic trappings to invade the Brighton Music Hall on Oct. 2.

"We have that spectacle, but really, in small shows, we get sweaty and get as loud as possible and just try to create an intense atmosphere," bassist singer James Johnston says. "We'd obviously love to play bigger shows, but we're not greedy.... The fact that we get to travel and play music is really astounding."

That's an attitude gleaned from touring the U.K. by van for a decade before cracking the arenas—and growing up in small-town Scotland, where Johnston and his twin brother and drummer singer Ben met singer guitarist Simon Neil in primary school. "When we were 13, we dreamed of headlining the Reading Festival," Johnston, 33, says. "Then, when you get to 18, 19, and you go on the road, you realize there's a long road in front of you." Then there's that band name, supposedly mashed together when they were teenagers joking about British rocker Cliff Richard and Biro pens, already obscure references for the U.S.

"Going over there with a slightly weird name, with an accent that people can't understand, it does stack things against you a little bit," Johnston says from Germany, adding of the Biffy Clyro tag, "Ultimately, it means nothing, like a lot of great band names.... We picked it because you could not pigeonhole the band."

Even upon listening, Biffy eludes easy categorization. Influenced early on by Guns N' Roses and Nirvana, the trio has honed a highly produced balance of hard rock and ballads, much like Foo Fighters, with prog-rock shifts inspired by Rush. "Challenging music, you might say, but we always cared about melody," he says. "It's nice in a band when you can make all different kinds of music, whatever you want to do."

"We get sweaty and get as loud as possible and just try to create an intense atmosphere."

Biffy Clyro took an ambitious next step by tackling a double album for Opposites, recorded in L.A. with producer Garth Richardson (Rage Against the Machine, L7). Neatly laced with everything from bagpipes to mariachi brass, the March release explores a lyrical theme in keeping with the cover graphic by Storm Thorgerson, who's done iconic album art for Pink Floyd and Led Zeppelin. The cover of Opposites depicts the world's supposedly oldest tree in Chile, still standing with its trunk and branches bent sideways.

"The idea is if you have strong roots, it doesn't matter what life throws at you," Johnston says. "You'll still be standing strong, and I think that's pretty much true of what's happened with the band."

He's alluding to the state of Biffy Clyro when his brother Ben blacked out from alcohol just before the recording sessions and went into recovery. "You're traveling around so much that it's almost like you're living in a bubble," Johnston says. "It's quite easy to lose focus on what's important."

Other bands might have hired a replacement drummer, but not the family-tight trio. "We've gone down this road for such a long time together, it just wouldn't feel right doing it with anybody else, and Ben has changed remarkably," Johnston says. "Everybody in life has some difficult times, but it's great when you have people around you, to support you."

As the chorus goes in "Picture a Knife Fight," Opposites' closing rocker, "We've got to stick together." That's the upside of a double album in which each half takes a differing viewpoint. "It's not until you've lived with the songs for a little while that you start to realize really what the songs are about, and that's when we realized there were two definite camps, one of them being a bit more pessimistic," the bassist says. "The other side is much more optimistic, that we've got to stick together and we can do this."

Now Biffy Clyro has taken that to the Reading Festival. As Johnston says, "We get to live our dreams." ◆

DEGREE OF DIFFICULTY

WELCOMING FRESHMEN TO BOSTON

EACH FALL, MORE THAN 15 MILLION NEW college freshmen course into our city and prepare to matriculate at some of the best colleges and universities in the nation. Whether you're an MIT Biting Stallion, an Emerson Lumberperson or a Tufts Crazed Bathroom Attendant (they really need a new mascot!), by now you'll be settled in and ready to begin the most exciting four years since the past four years. Unfortunately, nobody at your school is going to hand you a booklet with a title like "Orientation Kit," or "Student Handbook" or "Boston College Welcome Book for Incoming Freshmen." If only such a thing existed. Well, that's where I come in.

First of all, you'll want to know the cool spots to party. And all the hottest places are all the worst places, obviously. Right now you'll want to hang out in Stupidtown, Itchy Corner and especially the Bedbud District. Also, make sure to practice our strange pronunciations. For instance, "Faneuil Hall" is pronounced "Fun-Wheel, Huuurrrrrr." Say it any different and you'll sound like you just got off the bus from Stupidtown.

Speaking of transportation, you'll need to learn how to use our subway system, which is known as the Train-O-Matic—or "Tom" for short. The Tom lines are color-coded according to their dangerousness, but don't worry—they're all pretty dangerous. By the time you're a senior, you'll be a pro at climbing out of those emergency hatches and bribing the mole men to guarantee safe passage to the surface. Some college students also enjoy riding bikes, as you'll note from the many dented car doors you'll see throughout town.

Getting into bars will be a problem. If you don't have a fake ID, what I'd do is find someone who looks a lot like you, but older, and then follow them around until they go into a bar. Then when they leave, head right back to the door and say, "I'm just going back in, OK?" The bouncer will be like, "I thought you were a 50-year-old Asian lady a minute ago," and you'll say, "Yeah, I get that a lot."

I can't see how this wouldn't work. But if it doesn't, I guess you'll be partying back at the dorm, where the wine is fresh-made each week right there on your floor. (Tip: Never use the last stall in the bathroom, because that's where they're making the wine.)

Once the buzz wears off from your homemade banana wine, you might wonder how you're going to pay for college. Well, look outside at your parking space. If there's a white BMW there (and, indeed, you have a parking space), then don't worry! I think you're all set. Otherwise, work on devising a killer business plan. How about a chain of artisan pop-up food truck bodegas staffed by flash mobs? Or whatever's going to replace Facebook once we all get sick of ads that promise to make your torso so ripped you'll have definition on your pancreas?

Those two ideas are free. Now get in the shark tank. Literally, get in the shark tank at the Aquarium. It needs cleaning and that's the only internship you could find. What, those are seals, not sharks? Slow down, Mr. College Education. Keep acting like a know-it-all and you'll be scrubbing stalls for the water elephants.

Now, depending on which school you attend, you may consider joining a fraternity or sorority ("frat" and "soro" for short). These organizations tend to have distinct identities, like the "geek frat" or the "football frat" or the "fat frat." The one thing they all have in common is that they teach you good manners and better hygiene. The very real hazard is that students who join fraternities or sororities might graduate with stunted immune systems from living within these meticulously clean, rigorously ordered bubbles of civility. Especially the fraternities, 46 percent of which tested negative for bubonic plague last year.

Never use the last stall in the bathroom, because that's where they're making the wine.

So there you have it—you know your way around, you've got an internship and you've made a great ID out of a 1993 Wade Boggs Upper Deck baseball card (the tough part was growing the mustache). From here on out, think of me as your cool professor who takes the whole class down to the Esplanade and says, "If you want to understand the Bard, first you've got to understand how to play Ultimate." And then we just toss the disc around and maybe listen to some chill Widespread while you think, "I'm paying how much for this? I've made a terrible mistake."

Don't worry, that's just the frosh jitters talking. Hey, did I warn you about avoiding the "freshman 15?" I almost forgot about that. Per longtime city ordinance, each school is required to admit 15 freshmen who play bongo drums. You'll want to avoid them. Go Biting Stallions! ◆

Soroff On / Dermot Mulroney

LEAD ROLE

THE ACTOR TELLS US ABOUT KERMIT THE FROG, SKAKET BEACH AND KISSING JULIA ROBERTS.

LIFELONG SUMMERTIME Cape Cod resident Dermot Mulroney, 49, has appeared in upward of 60 major motion pictures, perhaps most notably as the leading man opposite Julia Roberts and Cameron Diaz in My Best Friend's Wedding, as a man dying of AIDS in Longtime Companion and as the leader of a group of runaways in Will Smith's big-screen debut, Where the Day Takes You. A classically trained cellist who frequently plays on film soundtracks, Mulroney attended Northwestern University. His latest projects include the film adaptation of August: Osage County, also starring Meryl Streep and Chris Cooper, and the new NBC series Crisis. He lives in Los Angeles with his wife, Tharita, and their daughters.

JONATHAN SOROFF: On Crisis, do you like playing the bad guy?
DERMOT MULRONEY: Who says I'm the bad guy? It's uncertain as to who's who. Even I don't know what's going to happen. The show's full of unexpected turns.

Single favorite thing about Orleans or Cape Cod? God, that's a tough question. You're talking about a lifetime of memories. But probably Skaket Beach.

Who's a better kisser: Julia Roberts or Cameron Diaz? What a rush to be asked that question after so many wonderful intervening years. [Laughs] Let's go with: I can't remember. Is that believable? Enough time has gone by that I can completely dodge that question.

Favorite cello piece? There are a few. Lalo, Boccherini, Saint-Saëns all wrote cello pieces accompanied by orchestra. Everybody loves the Bach suites.

Favorite cellist? Interesting. Maestro Mstislav Rostropovich. In high school, maybe 1979, I saw him conducting Yo-Yo Ma as the soloist, playing the Saint-Saëns concerto with the National Orchestra in Washington. It was the most stunning thing I'd ever seen.

The most unconventional use you've ever put your bow to? [Laughs] Maybe scratched myself somewhere hard to reach.

Biggest thing that parenting has taught you? The thing that I'm probably still trying to learn as a parent is acceptance. You can't always make them feel better or solve the problem or resolve the conflict.

Is it hard to raise kids in Hollywood? Well, I don't really operate in Hollywood circles with my kids. I go to the necessary events and whatnot, but my kids are just growing up in a West Coast urban environment. It's hard because it's such a massive city. They spend a lot of time in the car. It's not like you walk down the street to soccer practice.

How vain does your career require you to be? You have to care enough. I've never had a deficit in that department.

When you were a kid, did kids make fun of your name? Kermit the Frog came out when I was in 7th or 8th grade, and then the floodgates opened. It rhymes with funny stuff, too—hermit, spermit. That was gold.

Favorite actor to bounce off of? The easy answer is how great it was to work with Julia Roberts again on August: Osage County. But that whole cast goes beyond the amazing. Among my favorite actors are Gary Oldman and Jamie Foxx.

Who have you been starstruck or intimidated by? I hate to admit it, but probably there was a touch of that in the first scene I had to do with Jack Nicholson.

Anything you'd like to erase from your resume? I can honestly say that the few truly bad movies were more my bad performance and the movies themselves were OK. And in every case, I had such a wonderful time working on it that I can't wish it away.

Dream role? Anything that starts with a "p." Priest, politician, pirate, police officer. Seriously, I'm just happy to work.

Did you pay a lot of dues to get your first film role? I was signed in the summer of '85 and moved to Los Angeles as a client of William Morris. My first audition was August, and by January '86 I had the lead in a TV movie. So I was lucky. I've never pretended that I paid a lot of dues. By now, however, they have been paid. I feel like a reality-show contestant, at risk of getting voted off, but I'm still on the island.

Moment when you felt like you'd really made it? I've experienced that sensation several times, and each time it's been either an overestimation or a miscalculation.

If you were compared to an actor from the golden age of Hollywood, who would it be? Robert Mitchum.

How has your Irish heritage informed your acting? The little strain I see is the tradition of storytellers. It seems to run in that gene pool. You give anyone in my family half an excuse to spin a yarn, and they will.

Worst part of being a celebrity? My life is pretty normal. It's interesting to see my 4-year-old ask my wife, "Why is that person taking a picture of my daddy?" But those things are so brief. I never stumbled into a swarm situation. I guess there's weird s on the Internet.

You've done a ton of genre films... But you know what I haven't done? Horror. I need to get in on the horror thing.

Does it bug you that you're associated so strongly with a few movies? It's definitely My Best Friend's Wedding by a long shot, and then maybe Wedding Date, so it's obvious why I'm perceived as this leading-man type. But I'm a third or fourth character or part of an ensemble in almost everything.

Things in your life you're most proud of? Career-wise, I just hope all those people I've worked with had as good a time working with me as I did with them. In my life, it's an easy answer: my kids.

"I'm perceived as this leading-man type. But I'm part of an ensemble in almost everything."

IN THE BALANCE
"It's easier to keep a neutral base and change out your accessories," Nayak says. "I want it to be clutter-free, but loose."

MAKE THE SEASON BRIGHT

"Keeping it breathable," Nayak says. "That's the driving force behind the whole aesthetic." With views of the trees and the Neponset River, the space is defined by the "artwork coming through the windows." So in the fall, the palette shifts to "ambers, yellows and oranges. Bright green in spring. In the winter, we have the beautiful branches."

SMALL MINDED

WHY MICROAPARTMENTS ARE A BIG DEAL

BY Jacqueline Houton

WELL-LAID FLOORPLANS An innovation unit at Factory 63

Bigger is better. To a large degree, that sentiment sums up the trajectory of American home design. If you were a newbie to New England in the 17th century, chances are the thatched roof over your head would span less than 500 square feet. Flash forward three centuries to 1950, and the average new U.S. home clocked in at a roomier though still-modest 983 square feet. By 2009, it had swelled to 2,164 square feet, dwarfing home sizes in Denmark (1,475), France (1,206), Germany (1,173), Sweden (893) and the U.K. (818).

But in recent years, a counterpoint to America's love affair with Hummer homes has emerged. Locales like New York, San Francisco and Seattle have seen a rise in micro-apartments of 400, 300 and even 200 square feet, occupied by people willing to forfeit elbow room in exchange for shorter commutes, affordable rents and easy access to the enticements of city living.

It's a trend that dovetails with a number of demographic and cultural changes. Globally, more than half of all people now live in urban areas; by 2050, 70 percent will. Here in the States, the exodus to the 'burbs that began in the mid-20th century has reversed. July 2012 Census figures estimated Boston's population at 636,479, and it's growing faster than it has in decades. More than a third of the city's population is between the ages of 20 and 34, giving Boston the highest proportion of young professionals in any major American city. Many began their careers during or after the Great Recession, making market rates a tough swing, necessitating multiple roommates or even a move back in with mom and dad. Meanwhile, many baby boomers who have empty nests are looking to downsize. Across the age spectrum, more people are living alone than ever before. In 1950, adults living solo comprised 9 percent of all American households; now people who live alone make up 28 percent of households. Growing numbers are cognizant of their carbon footprints, increasing the appeal of housing that requires less land, building material, heating and cooling. And in the digital age, it's easier to make do with less stuff: Landlines, hulking shelves and entertainment centers, drawers full of photos albums, desktop computers—hell, even desks—seem increasingly redundant in an era of smartphones, e-readers and featherweight netbooks.

FACTORY FLOORS
The roof deck, an innovation unit and the lobby at Factory 63

What's more, Boston's growing population is facing rent prices at an all-time high. According to the 2012 Greater Boston Housing Report Card, since 2000, only two of the 20 metro areas covered by the Case-Shiller Home Price Index—New York and San Francisco—have consistently seen higher rents than Greater Boston, where a full quarter of renters devote more than half their incomes to paying for their apartments.

It's against this backdrop that microapartments have emerged. After they started popping up on the West Coast and in New York, Boston's first mini-units opened this year at Factory 63, a Fort Point development just across the street from chef Ming Tsai's buzzing Blue Dragon. The LEED Gold-certified five-story building includes 23 units of "innovation housing," ranging in size from 370 to 530 square feet, in addition to larger lofts. They're 100 percent occupied, with a waitlist for would-be tenants. "I think people are realizing what they need from a space standpoint is not a number of square footage; it's smart, usable space," says Matt Edlen of eco-minded developer Gerding Edlen, a Portland, Ore.-based firm that's been creating what he calls "highly efficient units of a more urban scale" since the mid-2000s.

For Factory 63's innovation units, the firm aimed to use the strengths of the original building, formerly a shoe factory (insert your living-in-a-shoebox joke here). "You've got this wonderful old building with great heights," Edlen says. "Let's really take advantage of the fact that you've got 12 feet from floor to ceiling and these massive windows." Natural light is maximized—a pane of opaque glass in the bathroom wall lets light filter into the bedroom area, for instance—and storage space above kitchen cabinets and closets makes use of the verticality. And though the units have an open plan, unlike a typical studio, there are clearly defined functional areas: a bedroom space, then a kitchen and bathroom in the middle, with the respective plumbing running back to back, and finally a living area.

But a big part of the micro concept is that your living area isn't limited to your own unit. "Creating smart common spaces where people can come together, where you can extend your home, in essence, is really important," Edlen says. There's a roof deck with lounge chairs and a grill, as well as a storage room with locked units and wall-mounted bike racks. But the heart of the building is the first-floor lobby. The vibe is cozy industrial with weathered wood and stainless steel, the exposed brick, pipes and beams offset by turquoise armchairs and colorful rugs. There's a countertop with bar stools, a kitchenette stocked with snacks, and small tables topped with books and origami fortune-tellers. Turn the corner, and you'll find two conference rooms decorated with hyper-local art, like Karen Stein Shanley's Tools of the Trade, depicting the T-squares, paintbrushes, knives and other accoutrements of Fort Point artisans and chefs. Just beyond is the Design Innovation Gallery, featuring Design Museum Boston exhibits that change every six weeks.

It's all open to the public during regular business hours.

"We really looked at how we can leverage common space, not just as an amenity, but really as true public space.... Especially from the standpoint of innovation housing, a place where you're marrying work and lifestyle, we wanted to create a space where the tenants found value and could connect with the greater community," Edlen says. "Over the course of a day, it's used in a multitude of different ways." One resident tutors students in English in the space; a handful of local startups convene there regularly, taking advantage of the workspace, complimentary Wi-Fi and refreshments. Easy-mop floors and movable furniture allow for larger gatherings: The lobby has hosted CreativeMornings lectures, fashion shows, the inaugural meeting of the South Boston/Fort Point Environmental Assembly and, of course, residents' own parties.

"If you're going to have a unit that's only 350 square feet, you're probably not going to invite 10 of your best friends over to watch the Super Bowl," says David Silverman, principal at Seaport architecture and interior design firm Silverman Trykowski Associates and president/founder of the Urban Neighborhood Design Alliance. "The only way that these smaller units work is if you almost change the way you think about how you live. So what's happened is that these complexes that have microunits tend to have higher-quality public space." The presumption is that residents will spend a lot of time outside their unit—in the building's common areas, but also out in the city itself. "In cities like Boston, New York and Chicago, these 24-hour urban environments, you find yourself in the urban environment as much if not more than where you actually live," says Edlen, whose firm emphasizes an ideal of "20-minute living," wherein most of your needs are available within a 20-minute radius. In that context, the nature of the neighborhood surrounding a microunit becomes all the more important. Silverman points out that the Innovation District has been waiting for a supermarket for a long time. "Creating not just good projects, good buildings, but also infrastructure, parks and public places for people to congregate, good restaurants and all that" is key, he says. "Only when you can have all of those amenities and the right infrastructure around these housing projects, then I think you'll find more and more people willing to take a smaller place to live if they have more opportunity available to them outside of their unit."

Just around the corner from Factory 63 is Gerding Edlen's next project, 315 on A, a much larger 20-story tower slated to open in November with a mix of studios, most of which range from 464 to 600 square feet, and larger one- and two-bedrooms. Though not billed as innovation housing, 315 on A does hew to similar design principles as those seen in its sibling—efficient use of space, emphasis on common areas (which get the best views) and green touches, like solar paneling and Nest thermostats that learn residents' habits. "While we do these smaller units, we balance it out with equally efficient larger units as well. Those who are in the studio or one-bedroom who want to live in the city and be in the urban cores, eventually they're going to start families, or need a true office in their unit, or get married. For whatever reason, more space will be needed," Edlen says. "It's going to be really crucial that we look at not just today's needs as our urban environments are expanding, but also to tomorrow's, because it's going to be here before we know it."

"Let's really take advantage of the fact that you've got 12 feet from floor to ceiling and these massive windows."

Elsewhere in the Innovation District—where city regulations on minimum unit size have been relaxed—other developers are working on projects with a micro scale. Among them are the Residences at 399 Congress Street, a 22-story complex whose 414 apartments will include 60 innovation units of 325 to 450 square feet, and 100 Pier 4, a 21-story complex whose 369 apartments will include 50 innovation units of a similar size. Both are designed by local firm ADD Inc., where architect Tamara Roy serves as senior associate principal. Dubbed "the mother of the microunit" by one client, Roy has been an evangelist for compact living. In 2010, she was one of five architects tapped by Mayor Thomas Menino to take part in a symposium on housing for the newly rebranded Innovation District. "I asked my young staff, 'What do you guys think would be innovative?' They all answered, 'Well, we can't afford to live in Boston, so who cares?' " she says with a laugh.

For Roy, microapartments seemed like a solution, but she says some in the administration were skeptical about whether anyone would really want to live in units of only a few hundred square feet. So ADD decided to do some research: Young staffers created a task force called What's In, mentored by Roy, and teamed up with the mayor's ONEin3 initiative to gather 40 emerging professionals for focus groups. "A lot of people really said, regardless of the design aspect, that price was one of the most important driving factors," Roy says. "They were really fine with going as small as 250 square feet for a unit as long as they could have their own bathroom and a tiny kitchen... a place to eat, a living area, a bedroom area and then some storage. But everything could be smaller." What's In used the results of their research to build a full-scale 300-square-foot prototype, complete with a bed alcove, a Fair Housing Act-conforming bathroom, a compact Acme kitchenette, a wraparound counter that can serve as a dining table or desk, seating that doubles as storage, and a wall mount for a bike by the front door. It debuted last November at the ArchitectureBoston Expo and made appearances this year at Suffolk University and the Boston Society of Architects' BSA Space. "It was really convincing to a lot of people," Roy says. "They started to walk through and say, 'Wow, I could live in this.' People in their 50s and 60s were saying, 'I'm sick of all my stuff. I could definitely live in this if it was in a cool building in a good location near transit.'"

MODEL BEHAVIOR

One thing the model unit didn't have was any folding furniture. "At least in these groups that we were doing, they said, 'We don't really like to have to fold up our apartment to try to make more space,'" Roy explains. But there has been progress since the clunky Murphy beds of the '70s, as shown by the Design Innovation Gallery's first exhibit, titled "Innovative Urban Housing" and curated by Silverman Trykowski Associates. "Part of the thinking was, let's think about housing from the standpoint of not just the amount of space that's required for comfortable living, but also creative solutions at the furniture scale," Silverman says. "How do we get the most out of the space that we have? I think that's going to be a big movement to come." The exhibit included efficient European designs imported by New York's Resource Furniture. "In Europe, because they've been building smaller apartments longer than we have, they were kind of first to get there," he continues. "They were already starting to play with the concept, come up with foldable coffee tables, desks, dining tables and things like that, and develop some really beautiful stuff." Of course, other decor elements can help too. "Paint is cheap," Silverman says with a laugh. "If you pick the right colors and think about how the light interacts with it, it can make spaces feel bigger." (See sidebar for more decor ideas for small spaces.)

"Our future workforce can't afford to live here. How do we solve this problem? It's such a multi-headed problem. The microunit is not the only solution."

It seems spaces of this size, done right, can be livable for many people. Whether they'll actually be affordable is an open question, given the pressure to price units at whatever the market will bear. Factory 63's innovation units received 47 applications for the 23 slots in the first week, and the monthly rates ended up at $1,700 to $2,400, significantly higher than many expected. "I have heard some people express concerns about the price of the smaller units, and I think there's still work to be done on those," Silverman says. "I think the [result of the] mayor's race could open up some opportunities for Boston residents as well in different parts of the city, not just the Innovation District," a neighborhood that, he points out, has seen an influx of large companies like PricewaterhouseCoopers and State Street, and with them have come luxury apartments touting waterfront views, raising market rates. Roy agrees. "Our real hope is to see them get out of the Innovation District and filter into neighborhoods that are much more affordable to build in—ones that still have all the amenities of restaurants and great energy, whether it's Allston/Brighton or Roxbury or East Boston or really anywhere outside the core, but where you can still get to transit and have a nice community to live in."

There are some glimmers of progress on that front. This summer, the Boston Redevelopment Authority rolled out a new policy allowing studio units of 450 square feet anywhere within a mile of rapid transit and commuter rail service. Previously, 500 square feet was the minimum for neighborhoods outside downtown Boston and the Innovation District. One- and two-bedroom minimums also shrank slightly, from 750 to 625 square feet and 900 to 850 square feet, respectively. And there's been progress on a proposed development at 1047 Comm. Ave. in Allston that would reportedly create 180 SRO units ranging from 360 to 420 square feet, aimed at graduate students and young professionals.

The teams behind projects can also make a big difference. "For-profit developers who are working downtown, it's not necessarily their mission to make more affordable housing," Roy explains. She says community development corporations make ideal clients for microunit projects. "These folks really care about the communities and who can afford to live there." And the city can also play a role through policy and perhaps even pilot projects on public land. "The city has talked about offering up city-owned land for projects that might fit this kind of target," says Roy, who served on an advisory group for Menino's Housing Boston 2020 blueprint. Released in September, it calls for the creation of 30,000 new housing units by 2020 and identifies four priorities for the city: accommodating growth, expansion of the middle class, college and university housing, and affordable housing for Boston's workforce, which is expected to grow as an estimated 100,000 new net jobs are created in Boston by 2020.

"Our future workforce can't afford to live here: How do we solve this problem? It's such a multi-headed problem. The microunit is not the only solution," Roy emphasizes. But it's one that's gained impressive ground in a relatively short time, considering the sometimes-glacial pace of Boston politics. "It's really been an incredible ride for us for three years.... It's become a real issue that you can hear all the political candidates address," she says. "There are so many different issues and struggles and challenges with living in cities. And a lot of things architects don't have any control of, but this particular one was this moment where the passion of the design staff could solve a problem in an interesting way." Small, she hopes, could be the next big thing. ◆

SMALL HOME, BIG STYLE

– DECOR TIPS FOR TWEE SPACES –

Kendra Amin-Dufton knows plenty about making the most of a small space. "Being a city-based company, a lot of our clients are in the city, and some of them definitely have more challenging smaller spaces," Amin-Dufton says. She and her husband, Brad Dufton, are the duo behind colorTHEORY Boston, which offers interior design, painting and wallpaper services. But they put their know-how into practice at home as well. A few years back, their 819-square-foot South End apartment—not micro by any means, but snug enough for two people and four cats—was a finalist in the Little Division of Apartment Therapy's "Small Cool" contest. They eventually moved into a slightly smaller apartment nearby, where they've stayed even as their family expanded. "We recently had a baby, and rather than trying to move at a really hectic time, we just make the most of the space we have," Amin-Dufton explains. We tapped her for some pro tips on giving a small home outsized style.

• Color is your friend. "People assume they should go with white or very light colors, but more saturated or even darker colors trick the eye into pushing the walls or ceilings away from you," Amin-Dufton says. "It simultaneously gives the room a more voluminous feeling but also a cozy environment as well."

• Don't be afraid of daring patterns. "In smaller spaces, it can be an opportunity to use a wallpaper that has a bold print, which might not necessarily translate in a huge room," where it could feel over-the-top. "It has a lot more impact in a smaller space," Amin-Dufton says.

• Play with proportion. "If they need a floor lamp, it would be our suggestion to go with something bigger and bolder rather than trying to minimize it, and really making a statement," Amin-Dufton says. "Same thing goes for a pendant light or even wall decor—an oversized mirror, or just filling a wall with a variety of artwork. That can really bring the space to life."

• Put your possessions on rotation. "Rather than having everything on display all at once, we have a curated collection that we can change out intermittently," Amin-Dufton says. "It almost seems like you're getting something new, but rather than accumulating more things, you just switch out what you do have periodically to change up your environment." If you can, opt for customized built-ins so you'll have lots of storage space for prized pieces.

• Remember that being forced to edit can have fringe benefits. "You're making everything really deliberate in your home rather than just collecting as much as you can. If you have a large 3,000- to 5,000-square-foot home, every room is not going to be a reflection of you," Amin-Dufton says. "That's the thing about smaller spaces: You really have the opportunity to make every aspect of that home a reflection of your taste and your style."

WITH Bre Welch

Our Boston's Best makeup artist shares her tips and tricks for recreating these trendy fall looks.

1. The Trend: MATTE VELVET SKIN

Replace dewy glowing looks for fall. Embrace matte, velvety textures with bronze- and blush-free skin for a smooth finish.

The Secret

Apply primer to the entire face with a foundation brush for a long-lasting finish. Next, paint on a moisturizing mineral foundation. Then, in a circular motion, dust on a finishing powder for a seamless, airbrushed look.

2. The Trend: BOLD BROWS

This season, eyebrows are a woman's top accessory. Pair them with lashes lit up with a tint of colored mascara.

The Secret

Brush brow hairs up to find your natural shape; then fill in sparse areas with a pencil, using short, feathery strokes to arch and even out the contours. Dip the brow gel wand into a colored mascara to tint and intensify your brow. Double-dip and finish your lashes with a pop of color.

3. The Trend: CUPID'S BOW LIPS

Pucker your pout with a deep, dark crimson stain. Lips pair perfectly with a bare face and bold brow.

The Secret

Maximize the leftover foundation on your brush and buff out your natural lip color for all-day staying power. Next, line the lip along the cupid's bow in pointed strokes. Use an angled eyeliner brush and dab color toward the center of the lip for a perfect retro pucker.

4. The Trend: LAVENDER LIDS

Sculpt and shade the eye in a purple palette. Diffused violets, lilacs and lavenders give a subtle luster for a striking look.

The Secret

With your fingertip, round out lilac primer over the lid and under the eye. Add depth by contouring inner and outer corners with an amethyst hue. Blend and diffuse the center of the lid with a subtle gold luster for an illuminating effect.

5. The Trend: MATCHING NAILS

Nail your look with an intentional hook of color. Keep tips short and matte for a modern edge.

The Secret

Complete the look with an intended color match. Start with short manicured nails in a complementary polish. Layer with a mattefying topcoat for a suede texture.

PERFORMING ARTS

GREAT EXPECTATIONS

And you thought your freshman-year composition class was tough. In Seminar, written by Theresa Rebeck, four competitive young writers invest their money and their aspirations into a private workshop taught by Leonard, a lauded editor, journalist and former novelist. He rules his 10-week writing class with an iron fist, delivering blistering critiques that demoralize the once hopeful students. As they strive to find their voices, the plots of their personal lives grow increasingly complicated—and their teacher finds himself sharing a story that was never on the syllabus. Class is in session at the Stoneham Theatre through Sept. 29. Maria Scenna

WORD ON THE STREET In 1980s Washington, D.C., away from the political din, a street-art king ruled the other side of the capital. The scrawling script of his tag was omnipresent, but no one actually knew who this prolific graffiti artist was. The Legend of Cool "Disco" Dan follows the life and times of Cool "Disco" Dan, who made his mark during the height of the crack epidemic. The documentary explores the Go-Go culture of D.C. through the eyes of this "urban phantom." Discover the life behind the concrete canvas through Oct. 5 at the Museum of Fine Arts. Jemma Douglas

Reviews by Sean Burns

2 Guns ★★★½ Probably the most purely enjoyable of this summer's popcorn pictures, this hilarious south-of-the-border caper is a showcase for star wattage, with Denzel Washington as an undercover DEA agent working with Mark Wahlberg's naval intelligence officer to take down a Mexican drug cartel run by the always awesome Edward James Olmos. The only catch is that neither knows the other's secret, at least not before they accidentally rip off $42 million in cash from a secret CIA black-ops slush fund. Double crosses and betrayals abound, with a sadistic government assassin (Bill Paxton) leaving a pile of bodies behind him on their trail. Packed with loving references to the scummy '70s cinema of Sam Peckinpah and Don Siegel, 2 Guns capitalizes on chemistry. Denzel's unflappable, smooth-talking jive makes a marvelous match for Wahlberg's bull-in-a-china-shop belligerence. Director Baltasar Kormakur has an expert eye for action sequences, but the real pleasure of 2 Guns is just watching the two leads blabbering at each other. (In the suburbs.)

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

Afternoon Delight ★½ Mistaking smug self-awareness for satire, Six Feet Under scribe Jill Soloway's rancid debut feature attempts to skewer yuppie privilege while accidentally wallowing in it. TV's secret weapon Kathryn Hahn gets a rare leading film role as Rachel, a bored housewife living in L.A.'s pseudo-bohemian Silver Lake neighborhood, a moneyed oasis of overachievers and soy pizzas from Whole Foods. An ill-considered attempt to make her husband (Josh Radnor, blandness personified) look up from his iPhone lands the couple in a strip club, where Rachel meets 19-year-old McKenna, played by the great Juno Temple, who improbably winds up moving in with the couple and working as a nanny when she's not turning tricks downtown. Depressingly, the movie treats McKenna worse than any of her clients ever did. The disposable prostitute exists to perform a function—repairing the marriage of two wealthy and uninteresting people. After helping Rachel get her groove back, she's humiliated and appallingly discarded without a second thought on the way to what Soloway appears to consider a happy ending. (At Kendall Square.)

The Attack ★★ Some husbands just don't pay attention. This glumly plodding Middle Eastern depress-o-rama stars Ali Suliman as a successful Arab surgeon living the high life in Tel Aviv, until the day his wife goes and blows herself up at a children's birthday party. Working from a book by Yasmina Khadra, director Ziad Doueiri drags our protagonist through the stages of denial, anger and acceptance. Suddenly shunned by Israeli society types, he heads for his hometown of Nablus to try to make sense of his wife's secret conversion from happy homemaker to radical terrorist. Constructed like a film-noir detective story on sleeping pills, The Attack is mostly Suliman wandering from one depressed location to another, hearing long-winded political talking points from all sides of the conflict. There's admirable attention to the details of daily life, but this kind of material is better suited for a novel. A movie needs a little more oomph than just watching somebody listen, especially an actor as sullen and poker-faced as Suliman. (At West Newton.)

Blue Jasmine ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature has become a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy, in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Drinking Buddies ★ On the surface, this looks like maddeningly prolific DIY auteur Joe Swanberg's most accessible film to date, one made with real movie stars, actual money and a Hollywood hook. Olivia Wilde, Jake Johnson, Anna Kendrick and Ron Livingston star as a pair of mismatched couples, best friends secretly harboring feelings for one another as they drink too much while working at a Chicago craft brewery. Then you sit down to watch it, and it turns out to be the same

Advice to Contributors

Submit film listings by fax (617-859-1446), by mail to "Calendar: Movies" or by email to movies@improper.com. Include address, phone number, date, time, price, nearest T stop and a brief description. Deadline is four weeks prior to publication. Listings not accepted over phone.

old Swanberg amateur hour. Improvised from an outline instead of a script, it's an indifferently photographed chronicle of passive-aggressive behavior by people who have nothing particularly interesting to say. Drinking Buddies is the kind of movie you forget while you're still watching it. According to Swanberg partisans, his technique strips away the artifice and cuts to human truth. I would argue that if you strip away things like camera placement, scene construction and dialogue writing, you've just stripped away everything that is cinema, leaving you with a glorified home video. (At Kendall Square and On Demand.)

Elysium ★ 1/2 Sneaking in under the wire to wrestle the award for this summer's most stupidly illogical screenplay away from Star Trek Into Darkness, director Neill Blomkamp's follow-up to 2009's nifty (if wildly overpraised) District 9 is a health care/immigration allegory that makes less sense the more you think about it. It's 2154 and the one-percenters have moved on up to a deluxe space station in the sky, leaving polluted, overpopulated Earth in the condition of a Rio de Janeiro favela. Matt Damon stars as an ex-con factory worker with a nasty case of radiation poisoning, attempting to crash the orbiting gated community for access to high-tech tanning beds that cure every illness. Jodie Foster is just awful as the hard-nosed homeland-security honcho barking orders to kill all the poor people with an accent from Planet Brando. Devoid of nuance, characterization or coherence, Elysium staggers from one arbitrary, unmotivated action sequence to another, and even Damon—normally the most reliable actor in movies—seems to lose interest about halfway through. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Family ★★ Robert De Niro has been lazily phoning it in for the past 15 years, so it's a bit of a shock to see him awake, alert and delivering a genuinely endearing turn in director Luc Besson's otherwise muddled comedy. The raging bull stars as a not-so-reformed wise guy relocated for the umpteenth time, this year to a sleepy French village, thanks to the witness protection program. But he and his family (wife Michelle Pfeiffer, plus kids Dianna Agron and John D'Leo) are unrepentant horrors, busting heads and blowing stuff up at the slightest sign of disrespect, which as you might expect happens quite often to ugly Americans in rural France. Besson can't reconcile his farcical construct with the regular bursts of graphic violence; it just feels confused. The film's meager pleasures are in the performances, with Pfeiffer busting out her old Married to the Mob routine and the twinkly-eyed De Niro needling gruff FBI handler Tommy Lee Jones. It's a weird movie even before De Niro ends up watching GoodFellas. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fruitvale Station ★★★★ The shooting of unarmed 22-year-old Oscar Grant in the back by a Bay Area Rapid Transit police officer was a case that galvanized the public, with unnerving similarities to the recent George Zimmerman verdict. But this extraordinary debut film from writer-director Ryan Coogler leaves all that in the future, dialing back a day for a low-key, humanist portrait of the final 24 hours of Grant's life. It's a gentle film, with deep reservoirs of empathy and understanding. Fruitvale Station has a loose, hang-out vibe, following Grant around this Oakland community. Coogler is roughly the same age and from the Bay Area, which is probably why every detail in the picture feels so lived-in—and so right. Played in a brilliant, star-making turn by Michael B. Jordan, Grant's no angel, nor is he a martyr. It's a glimpse of one day in one life. Maybe it wasn't a remarkable life. But it was a life all the same, stupidly and tragically snuffed out. (In the suburbs.)

Getaway ★ A 90-minute car chase in which you can't see anything that's happening, director Courtney Solomon's Getaway is an affront to the art of film editing. It's a mishmash of shots strewn together seemingly at random, discarding any sense of cinematic grammar and barely holding on an image for more than two or three seconds. Ethan Hawke stars as Brent Magna (great name!), a retired race car driver who comes home one Christmas night to find his wife has been kidnapped; a man with a silly accent is on the phone telling him to steal a souped-up Shelby Mustang Silver Snake and drive it through the city crashing into stuff, otherwise she's dead. For reasons too stupid to explain, Selena Gomez ends up riding shotgun. While they evade and destroy dozens upon dozens of police cars she pouts, complains and for all intents and purposes is required to narrate the action sequences because otherwise we wouldn't have any idea what the hell is going on. Come back, Dom Toretto! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Grandmaster ★★★ Drastically re-edited for American release, complete with expository English-language title cards and a laughable promotional campaign with music by the Wu-Tang Clan, the great director Wong Kar-Wai's latest finally arrives on these shores as an awkward patchwork quilt. The true-life tale of Chinese martial-arts legend Ip Man (Tony

FAMILY MAN In The Family, Robert De Niro stars as the patriarch of a Mafia family that moves to a rural French town. PHOTO: JESSICA FORD

Leung) spans decades and wars in a traditional biopic format, but there's a much dreamier, sadder Wong Kar-Wai movie clearly struggling to get out. As evidenced by masterpieces like In the Mood for Love and 2046, he's foremost a poet of heartbreak. So while these fight scenes are indeed intricately and gorgeously rendered, emphasizing precision over violence, there are also an awful lot of them. After much lurching about, The Grandmaster finally finds its soul in the second hour, settling into the unrequited love story between Leung and fellow exile Ziyi Zhang. Suddenly, we're back to Wong's period Hong Kong of lush surfaces, incandescent colors and feelings too fragile to be expressed. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Kick-Ass 2 ★ 2010's Kick-Ass was a guilty pleasure that, to borrow a Mel Brooks quote, "rises below vulgarity." The deliriously violent tale of a teenage comic book geek (Aaron Taylor-Johnson) donning a scuba suit to fight crime was stolen outright by Nicolas Cage's cracked wannabe Batman and his potty-mouthed 11 year-old sidekick (Chloë Grace Moretz). Cage is dearly missed in this sorry sequel, as is the gonzo energy that made the first film so rudely entertaining. Recycling one joke to diminishing, snail-paced returns, this unnecessary rehash finds our title character targeted for revenge by Christopher Mintz-Plasse's lisping, bondage-clad villain, calling himself a name that cannot be printed in this magazine. Replacement director Jeff Wadlow is pathetically overeager to offend, wallowing in ugly dialogue that sounds like it was written by a stunted adolescent who just discovered curse words. Co-star Jim Carrey chose to disassociate himself from the film, citing a crisis of conscience after Newtown. But the problem isn't that Kick-Ass 2 is immoral; the problem is that it isn't funny. (At Boston Common.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★½ A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Riddick ★★½ The Chronicles of Riddick, writer-director David Twohy's epically craptacular 2004 follow-up to his nifty little 2000 B-picture Pitch Black, bombed. But Vin Diesel wouldn't let it go. I can't really blame him because it's easy to see why he loves playing Riddick. A healthy percentage of screen time in every Riddick movie is devoted to supporting characters standing around talking about how awesome Riddick is, and how terrified they are of Riddick. Then Riddick eventually makes a grand entrance and doesn't expend much effort killing people in various clever and amusing ways. No wonder he kicked in his own cash to get this passable third picture made! Note the absence of "Chronicles" in the title this time. It's a leaner, more entertaining piece of work. Gory as hell, Riddick is an Aliens-styled barrage of creepy crawlies and shifting alliances presided over by Diesel, clearly having the time of his life. I sheepishly admit that over the years, I've grown inexplicably fond of Diesel's fashion model poses and doofus line readings. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Spectacular Now ★★½ Hard-partying Sutter (Miles Teller) has never taken anything seriously, least of all himself. But on the verge of graduating high school he finds himself unexpectedly smitten with good girl Aimee (Shailene Woodley), a delicate wallflower who lives in a world beyond his circle of never-ending keggers. She tutors him in geometry; he teaches her how to drink. But do they have a future when Sutter only lives in the now? Based on the young adult novel by Tim Tharp, The Spectacular Now is gentle, exceedingly well-acted and directed with tact and restraint by James Ponsoldt. Some folks are already calling it a coming-of-age classic. But I couldn't get past the cloddish screenplay by (500) Days of Summer writers Scott Neustadter and Michael H. Weber, which reiterates and underlines the themes in bright red, then spells them out again just in case anybody missed anything. Take a drink every time these characters deliver monologues about "living in the now," and you'll be in worse shape than the alcoholics onscreen. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Wolverine ★★½ Few films fall apart as spectacularly in their third act as this second attempt to give Hugh Jackman's knuckle-knived berserker a stand-alone franchise apart from his mutant X-Men pals. This time around he's on the run through the Far East, protecting an heiress (Tao Okamoto) marked for death by the Yakuza, various ninjas and a few rotten relatives. What makes The Wolverine so refreshing for so long is its smallness of scale. There's no apocalyptic CGI grandeur, just a lot of close-quartered fights full of sharp, pointy objects. Journeyman director James Mangold hews to clean compositions, clearly defined action geography and striking use of the Japanese locations. It's tightly focused, even intimate by comic book standards. Until all of a sudden, it isn't anymore. The film's final segment retreats to a generic industrial space for a cacophony of preposterous plot twists and weightless computer-generated destruction, complete with the now obligatory midcredits teaser for the next installment. Such a shame, as this was almost a real movie. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The World's End ★★ Critics aren't supposed to admit such things, but we all have aesthetic blind spots. It's part of the human condition. Not everything works for everybody, particularly when it comes to comedy. Director Edgar Wright and his frequent collaborators Simon Pegg and Nick Frost are revered as gods in many circles, telling tales of stunted, funny men dragged kicking and screaming toward adulthood thanks to the outside interference of popular genre-film conventions. 2004's Shaun of the Dead was a promising debut, with two slackers on the margins of a zombie apocalypse. Less so was 2007's Hot Fuzz, a goof on buddy-cop cliches, and now The World's End did nothing for me at all. Pegg stars as a bleary drunkard dragging his middle-aged friends to re-enact a pub crawl from their teens, only to discover their hometown has been taken over by alien robots. I guess I'm just tired of the routine, respecting Wright's carefully rhyming compositions and frenetic editing without enjoying them very much at all. Your personal mileage may vary. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

FIRED UP After four years away from the touring circuit, A Fire Inside are rocking their way back to Boston. Since signing to Republic Records this summer and announcing an album due out in late October, the band continues to make post-hardcore magic. Frontman Davey Havok's dark emotions poured out through his lyrics when he started writing Burials two years ago, but despite the heavy material, the latest singles exhibit the raw, fist-pumping passion you'd expect. He's still a mad man bursting with energy onstage. Relish AFI's return on Oct. 7 at Royale. Coryn Doncaster

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

COPY THAT If exploring the museums of Florence isn't in this month's travel plans, Aaron Stephan's Art Handling may be the next best thing. The Portland, Maine, resident presents his own take on the Uffizi Gallery's The Wrestlers, a Roman copy of a lost Greek sculpture, as the exhibit's focal point. While other artists' copies on display throughout Europe range from bronze to marble, Stephan uses wood in his rendition, The Possible Inevitable. His accompanying mixed-media pieces highlight the physical form of brush strokes to continue a conversation, started by the likes of Duchamp and Warhol, on how people perceive modern art. Skip the lines at customs and head to Samson Gallery through Oct. 19. / Hannah Weintraub

Restaurants

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742 2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

MRS. JACK WOULD APPROVE

By all accounts, Isabella Stewart Gardner was a wildly entertaining hostess, and the keepers of her flame continue that tradition with the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's Third Thursdays, held every month.

On a flawless summer evening, a wildly diverse and eclectic crowd gathered at Fenway Court for an evening of assorted amusements: There were lawn games in the cafe terrace, a jazz concert in Calderwood Hall, short and sweet lectures on various topics, a participatory horticultural demo and the chance to chat with an all-ages, intriguing crowd over wine or a craft cocktail.

Among the faces spotted: unmistakable kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman, drug pusher Jamie Godfrey, the vivacious Hannah Curtis, the Bruins Foundation's very own Disney Princess, Elizabeth Thomas (who grew up in Orlando and played Ariel, Belle and Mary Poppins at the theme park), landscape curator Charles Waldheim, professional salon host Graham Wright, Opera on Tap babes Kimberly States, Erin Anderson and Abby Krawson, and one woman who said, "I play a mean game of cornhole. I already took out that 11-year-old."

The birds twittered in the Living Room, the cafe and the gift shop were packed, and, by one account, there were 700-800 people, but it never felt crowded.

As one guest put it: "It's sort of like summer camp goes to an art museum and hosts a cocktail party."

REALITY CHECK

Talk about an eye-opener. Walk With Purpose Waterwalk to benefit charity: water, held at the W, took vanity off the catwalk and, instead, invited guests to carry two 40-pound containers of water down a runway to give them a taste of a fraction of what millions of people around the world have to do every day to get fresh water.

The illuminating evening attracted an unusually good-looking crew, among them Bond girl Amber D'Amelio, newly transplanted fitness mogul Brian Weller and his wife, Shana, ubiquitous lovebirds Ben and Tonya Mezrich, chef-about-town Nuno Alves, techie hipster Jake Cacciapaglia, graphics genius Kathryn Yee, and a whole slew of fashion designers, like Luke Aaron, Candice Wu and Amber Lu, to name a few (sorry—I can't resist a rhyme). Then, of course, there was diminutive Argentine Daniela Corte and her gay husband, pneumatic Colombian playboy Ricardo Rodriguez, who refused to admit that he didn't know the party's lifeboat-yellow color scheme before putting on a pair of lifeboat-yellow bucks (yeah, right).

Speaking of shoes, it was astonishing how many women managed to make it down the catwalk carrying 80 sloshing pounds while wearing cha-cha heels, and it's a miracle a few of them didn't twist an ankle.

As one onlooker put it: "I appreciate the concept, but this has New England Baptist Emergency Room written all over it."

WATCH WHERE YOU POINT THOSE THINGS

Many hands make light work, and they also throw a swell party, like the Many Hands Summer Gala at Plimouth Plantation, which raised money for the museum's Craft Center.

While guests sipped cocktails in the courtyard, there were Native American and colonial-style artisans demonstrating their amazing skills—from Peter Follansbee, a wood carver so dexterous that he can make a reproduction of a 17th-century chair in a matter of days, to Bob Charlebois, a Quebec-raised First Nation craftsman who made a stunning purple and yellow headdress that was meant to mimic a woodpecker, using deer tail and porcupine.

On hand were the likes of emcee Jared Bowen, state Senate den-mother Therese Murray, Plymouth chatelaine Joanne Nikitas, archduchess of culture Anita Walker (the keynote speaker), Bluefish Capital honcho Stephen Brodeur, broadcasting mogul Peter Frame, the logically spelled Thomas Gloster III, Duxbury Cruising Club Commodore Robert Graff, marketing guru Gordon Harris, Native American studies honcho Cedric Woods and at least a handful of Hornblowers, who enjoyed a feast prepared by the Four Seasons' Brooke Vosika using 17th-century ingredients, recipes and techniques.

During the live auction, one woman said, "I'm Greek. If this goes on any longer, I might have to go home and shave my legs," while another observed, "There are three things a man should never give his wife: a day of beauty, cooking lessons or a gym membership."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the woman who was complimented for looking svelte and said, "Thanks. I don't have screaming zippers anymore—no more danger of putting an eye out with a button." ◆

POTATOES AND MEAT

THERE'S A POEM BY ADRIAN MITCHELL in which a procession of suitors tries to woo a lady through gifts of potatoes. She rejects the Strong Man, who offers her mashed, the Brash Man bearing chips, the Old Man with his hopelessly démodé baked. Only at the Frenchman's seductive pommes de terre Lyonnaise does she finally yield: Oh my corrugated lover / So creamy and so brown / Let us fly across to Lyon / And lay our tubers down.

"Giving Potatoes" is amusing because, in the register of sexless foods, the potato ranks alongside wheat germ and the canned sardine. Your average russet Burbank, coolly assessed, looks like it's already been digested. And yet, when we discussed printing a tribute to potatoes, the editorial staff turned emotional, even heated. I've never seen them so excited about sorghum or Arborio rice. But their passions crackled on the subject of poutine, and they were fanning themselves at the mention of aioli and its related dipping sauces.

The potato is our ur-starch. It's the subject of reckless experiments with Screamin' Dill Pickle flavoring, yet, as a comfort food, it trumps grilled cheese. It is, really, whatever we want it to be. It is the mirror of our souls. Our souls must be delicious drizzled with sea salt and truffle oil.

This issue's also full of meat, namely the less popular bits of cows. Ever since I wrote a book called Beef, people have asked me where to get a good rib-eye. Most places. But you should try a grilled heart instead.

What is the #futureofnature?

Do we need to choose between a healthy economy and a healthy natural world? The Nature Conservancy believes that people and nature can thrive together. In Massachusetts and around the world, we restore and protect important lands and waters. At the same time, we collaborate with businesses and local communities to encourage sustainable practices that support economic viability. By remembering that people are a part of nature, we can create solutions to the most urgent environmental challenges of our time. But we need your help.

TABLES FOR TWO

CHEF NOOKIE ON JUGGLING TWIN OPENINGS »»

GOING POSTAL: Chef [illegible]'s hands-on approach to opening restaurants

Humble Pie

This year, chef Steve "Nookie" Postal discovered that double the restaurants doesn't always mean double the fun. The former Fenway Park executive chef and contestant on Bravo's Around the World in 80 Plates decided to open two forthcoming Cambridge eateries, Jewish BBQ spot Steinbones and farm-to-table restaurant/market Commonwealth, at the same time. Nookie tells us what he's learned from his 120-hour workweeks—and how he avoids choking after biting off more than he can chew.

NEVER THROW AWAY A $50,000 CHECK. "The worst thing we ever did was when my brother invested money and my wife threw the check in the garbage. I had the check sitting on the table. I was going to bring it to the lawyer, and I went to get the check and [my wife] went, 'Uh, I just cleaned up the mail table.' It was garbage day and they took it. So then I had to call my brother, who had just given me a check for $50,000, and was like, 'I'm so sorry but I threw it in the garbage.'"

SANITATION CAN BE EXCITING. "Sh*t is insane. You know, the ejector pump and the like—it's crazy! The building is like a little bit elevated off the street, so you can't use gravity [to get it out]. So it's got to go in the basement, and they, like, shoot it out. It's actually pretty cool."

TAKE SLEEPING PILLS TO STOP THINKING ABOUT SWEETS. "Stress—it's been coming in waves. I'm not sleeping as well as I used to. I wake up in the morning and I feel like my mind is racing about, like, forks, and insurance policies, and pastry chefs and muffins."

DON'T BE TOO COCKY. "The biggest thing I learned about opening two restaurants at the same time is that I can't open two restaurants at the same time. I was like, 'I'm the chef of Fenway Park. I can do anything.' Then I realized, pretty quickly, that I can't do everything." / Hannah Sheinberg

HELLO, CELLO

YouTube sensation Steven Sharp Nelson and the Piano Guys play on Oct. 23 at the Berklee Performance Center.

HOW MANY CELLOS DO YOU HAVE? I think I'm starting to lose track. The last time I counted, it was 15. It sounds worse than cats, doesn't it? For the most part, I have five or six cellos that I really build all of our studio sound with. That's where our signature sound comes from. Most of the audio, 95 percent of what people are hearing, comes from the piano and the cello

HOW DID YOU COME UP WITH THE IDEA TO PLAY THE INSIDE OF THE PIANO? We've been asked that so many times because we played that on Jay Leno, Katie and the Today show, and that song was honestly just ADHD put to good use. We're all just surrounding the piano in a production meeting regarding a video we were scheduled to shoot, and the meeting started to get boring. So all of us sort of got off-task. Somebody just started plucking notes, and somebody starting banging a percussion part. And we thought, "Hey. Maybe we could do this as a song."

WHAT'S ONE OF YOUR FAVORITE VIDEOS YOU'VE MADE? I'll never forget what it was like filming "Peponi" on the 1,000-foot cliff with Alex Boye and doing the African spin on the Coldplay tune. There was this moment where I was sitting on the edge of the cliff, really 12 inches away from imminent death. This was like extreme cello, death-defying cello. And I remember the helicopter doing a path to film, and the rotary blade pushed such wind that my chair lifted just inches off the ground ever so slightly. I open my eyes and I'm out of my cello trance and I realize, "Oh, my God! I could die." And our next video is on the Great Wall of China, so we're really excited about that one.

DO YOU KNOW HOW MANY YOUTUBE VIEWS THE GROUP HAS? As of the moment of this conversation, we have 274 million views. We're just blown away by it. / Sarah Hagman

SMASH HIT: The Ichiban Whisky Smash features Japanese whisky.

Drink of the Moment
ICHIBAN WHISKY SMASH

PRICE: $13

INVENTOR: Haru's corporate beverage manager, Mimi Chen

INGREDIENTS: Yamazaki 12 Years Single Malt Whisky, Cointreau, orange juice, simple syrup, mint leaves, lemon and orange slices

WHAT DOES "ICHIBAN" MEAN? "It translates to 'number one' or 'best,'" Chen says. "For this cocktail, it was more along the lines of 'the best.' Shameless, I know. But it was meant in good humor."

CONTEXT: Whiskey smashes have undergone a revival with the fashion for 19th-century classic cocktails. This one takes an Asian turn with the use of Japanese whisky instead of bourbon. "It's similar to the mint julep, but with its use of fresh citrus, it is much lighter and easier to drink," Chen says.

FLAVOR: As smooth as an orange rind. The whisky's notes of dried fruit and vanilla play off the Cointreau and muddled lemons, oranges and mint, while its heat is softened by the juice and syrup. This is a quaffable, refreshing cocktail, with just enough edge to keep it from deck-chair territory. Ideal for the last days of sun before the November gloom.

HARU SUSHI
55 Huntington Ave.,
Boston (617-536-0770)
harusushi.com

FOR THE UNINITIATED: "This is a great cocktail for anyone who is new to Japanese whisky," Chen says. Or, better, order a dram of Yamazaki neat. Extremely smooth with lots of fruit and floral notes and a noticeable sweetness, it's a good argument to look beyond Scotland.

PAIR IT WITH: Short rib buns at the bar, or the crispy duck entree at dinner. / Andrew Rimas

DUMPLING GROUND : The lineup includes 10 savory and two sweet options.

Good Eats: Small Packages

Twelve is a lot of options when it comes to a dumpling menu, so if you go to Patty Chen's Dumpling Room, the reincarnation of Central Square's Pu Pu Hot Pot, here's how to narrow it down: Go for pan-fried. The wheat-based dough, which is house-made and on the thicker side, dutifully houses all manner of fillings, but stands up particularly well to a hard sear. The kimchi dumplings might be the best example. Surrounding the pork and spicy pickled cabbage filling is a wrapper that's soft but substantial and so gorgeously bronzed on its base that it crackles with each bite. / Elizabeth Bomze

RED MEANS "GO" FOR SELFISH BICYCLISTS

To cyclists who refuse to obey the stoplights on Comm. Ave.: I should expect a reasonable level of safety when I cross the street with the little traffic guy light. However, bikers who refuse to obey red lights have turned crossing the street into a game of Frogger. I totally support what you guys are doing with living a healthy lifestyle and saving the environment, but please be mindful that pedestrians are out there, too.

Worried walker

To the woman working the late shift at Dunkin' Donuts in Central Square: Thank you for being courteous and professional even after dealing with a group of drunken college kids before taking my order. I appreciated your prompt service with a smile. I hope my small tip made up for your trying evening.

Impressed by your patience

To the man playing an impromptu concert on the Copley Square piano: You made my walk home much better after a long day at the office. I'm glad that I was able to pause for a moment and listen to you playing. I hope more musically inclined Bostonians follow suit.

Music to my ears

To dog walkers on Beacon Hill: Yes, your dog is adorable. HOWEVER, that does not mean that you don't have to pick up after them. I shouldn't have to keep my eyes on the sidewalk at all times to avoid stepping in whatever they left behind.

It's a minefield

To the fellow T riders: We're all tired. It's been a long day. We're squished together like sardines, and all anyone wants to do is find a seat. When one opens, no matter how badly you want it, give it to the pregnant woman. I've seen too many pregnant women standing while young men are sitting. I'd bet money she's more uncomfortable than you are, so be courteous.

FINE KETTLE OF FISH: The smoked bluefish dip

Purveyors: Holy Smoke

Matt Baumann's career change was sealed, literally, on a recent trip home to Michigan. He and his brother, Ben, were toying around with the smoker and vacuum sealer they'd bought their parents for Christmas—and the resulting smoked fish turned out really well. They spent the 12-hour drive back to Boston concocting a business plan: Matt would put aside practicing law, and the pair would build a smokehouse on Ben's property in Sudbury. Since launching Matt's Amazing Smokehouse in June, they've introduced three salmon flavors (Lemon Dill, Cedar Plank and Ragin' Cajun) as well as a must-try dip made from rich but clean-tasting hickory-smoked local bluefish. / Elizabeth Bomze

Matt's Amazing Smokehouse is available at theamazingsmakehouse.com and Bastan-area markets such as Dave's Fresh Pasta, American Pravisians, and the SaWa, Dewey Square, Davis Square and Lexingtan farmers markets.*

COOKING THE BOOKS

When Abby Ruettgers discovers a vintage cookbook, she doesn't start at the beginning—she lets the tome fall open to the most-used recipe, or turns to a sauce-splattered spread. "I always look for the greasy, gross pages, because those are the good ones," says the owner of Farm & Fable, a cookbook shop and demonstration kitchen slated to open in the South End by late October.

A compulsive collector who long used vintage finds as gifts, Ruettgers had dabbled in the restaurant industry since high school. But she kept those passions on the back burner: "I had a really normal, boring career as a product liability litigator at a big firm, which was soul-sucking." Eventually, she left the law to work at Flour under chef Joanne Chang, who'd made a similar pivot, trading a career in management consulting for one in the kitchen.

The Farm & Fable concept started marinating during Ruettgers' time at Flour, when the former history major and Brimfield fiend sought a way to combine her antiquarian impulses and love for hospitality. It all came together when she found a long-vacant two-floor space with room for a kitchen (once the resident pigeons had been chased out). The ground floor has been outfitted with custom shelves for vintage and antique cookbooks, from 19th-century treasures to midcentury standbys to culinary oddities—say, Monifold Destiny: The One! The Only! Guide to Cooking on Your Car Engine! Ruettgers adds with a laugh, "Cooking Is for Lovers, Cooking in the Nude... the '70s got a little funky."

Joining the vintage volumes are "new classics" and cookbooks by area authors, along with antique and new kitchenware, some crafted by local artisans. "If you're looking for All-Clad pots and pans, Williams-Sonoma can give you a better price than I can," Ruettgers explains. "I want what I call the new heirlooms, beautiful new kitchen items that you would love to pass down."

While the retail level feels rustic, with reclaimed floors from a Western Mass mill and a big farm table, the downstairs kitchen classroom is all polished concrete and stainless steel, with 10 seats around a butcher-block counter. There Ruettgers and local chefs will teach hands-on classes, ranging from $25 to $200 and covering topics like knife skills, oyster shucking and baking, canning and pickling, and even wild game hunting, cleaning and butchering.

Tying together both floors is a cookbook book club, whose members will bring dishes from featured selections to monthly potlucks. "Then we geek out about the cookbook and talk about what we liked, what worked, what didn't," Ruettgers says. "Sometimes when you get a new cookbook, there are 30 recipes you want to try, but it takes a long time to work through it. So you get a sampling of recipes through other people's labor." Perfect for times when you don't have a gravy-stained page as your guide. / Jocqueline Houton

MEI, OH MEI

TRUCK FAVE GOES BRICK-AND-MORTAR

LOCALLY SOURCED. FOOD TRUCK. Kickstarter. Sustainable. Humanely raised. There are plenty of buzz phrases that relate to Mei Mei Street Kitchen, and while the latest—brick-and-mortar—might not seem like anything new, it's part of a trend. Clover and Bon Me have gone from four wheels to four walls, and Roxy's Grilled Cheese is planning the same move. That left Margaret "Mei" Li and her two siblings, Irene and Andy, plenty of people to lean on for advice while planning for their location in Audubon Circle on the edge of Boston University's campus.

"The food-truck community is really close-knit, and it's nice having the community go through it all at the same time," Mei Li says. "I've talked to Patrick (Lynch) from Bon Me, and I talk to James (DiSabatino) at Roxy quite a lot, actually."

Li says Mei Mei is on track to open in mid- to late October, with counter lunch service to start, and sit-down dinner service expected to begin after a few weeks. Lunch service will be similar to what the food truck offers, with a slightly expanded menu. For dinner, however, customers can expect Mei Mei to increase its creativity.

"The idea for dinner is to do things we can't do in the food truck," Li says. That includes ingredients such as pasture-raised chicken and local seafood, which are difficult to offer at the right price on a food truck, as well as a shared double pork chop that could feed four people. "We're going to break down a lot of whole animals and explore different ways to serve different pieces."

Mei Mei has applied for a liquor license (and eventually hopes to be open past 11 pm and offer a late-night menu), but for now, diners can select from creative non-alcoholic drinks such as food-truck favorite Haymaker's Punch, composed of apple cider, vinegar, honey and bitters. The space was formerly home to a string of takeout pizza spots, and Li says they've done an extensive renovation, moving the counter back, exposing brick walls, adding reclaimed wood. Customers can also expect to see the trademark chalkboard that's used to detail specials on the food truck. But there is one change from the truck that Li and the rest of the staff are looking forward to.

"We'll have heat," Li says. "So we won't have to dress up in snowsuits or suffer through 100-degree days."

THREE TIMES A LOCAL

CHEF SPRAWLS OUT IN SUBURBIA

SECOND HELPINGS: The Local's new Wayland location

"I HAVEN'T SLEPT IN A WEEK," SAYS CHEF Brian Counihan, and it's no wonder. "I'm opening two restaurants within eight weeks, and I just got a puppy." Canine aside, Counihan is already busy as the culinary director of West Newton's The Local. Now, with a new Local just opened in Wayland and another set to open by Thanksgiving in Wellesley, Counihan has his hands full. Fortunately, he's hired two talented chefs to lead the new outposts: in Wayland, Frank Francione, who worked with Chris Parsons (Steel & Rye) at Catch and Parsons Table, and in Wellesley, Joe Guarino, most recently of Swampscott's Red Rock Bistro and formerly of Barbara Lynch's the Butcher Shop.

"The menu in West Newton will be the skeleton, the bones of the menu for all the restaurants," Counihan says. Centered on mainstays such as "fried pickles, fish and chips, our lobster roll and signature flatbread pizzas," the menus take a more adventurous tilt with specials unique to each location, such as Newton's seared Kurobuta pork belly with toy box tomatoes and Gorgonzola. Attention is paid to details: The meat for the burger is sourced from John Dewar & Co., fries are hand-cut, and there's a wide selection of gluten-free dishes.

Can we expect more Locals in the future? "Yes, absolutely," says Counihan, who promises another location to come "sometime in 2014."

BLACK BOOK

AN ANTHOLOGY OF GRIM LOCAL FICTION

BOSTON NOIR 2* edited by Dennis Lehane, Mary Cotton and Jaime Clarke Published by Akashic Books, 251 pages, $16 paperback
This book is set in Boston.

The visceral thrills of dark fiction only deepen when a sinister tale occurs close to home. In this anthology, Joyce Carol Oates takes some skeptical medical researchers to a séance in Quincy in 1887. One of them is "visited" by a boy who'd mysteriously died, turning the skeptic, hauntingly, into a convert to the medium's mysticism (and philosopher William James weighs in on possible incursions from the "other side").

In another story, Barbara Neely writes of Blanche, a black servant who watches with acerbic wit as her white, right-wing politician employer sucks up to black community leaders when he needs something from them. A sleazy minister, trying to be an "honorary white," elicits her sharp elbow in an "accidental" jab as she passes him hors d'oeuvres. Blanche's upstairs-downstairs, inside-and-outside perspective on racial ironies is as sharp as her elbow.

Dennis Lehane plunges us into a psychopathic murder story about mushrooms and guns. Linda Barnes' Carlotta Carlyle brings comic sassiness to solving a murder from inside her colorful cab, displaying all her equally colorful personality. And David Foster Wallace's explosive prose is breathtakingly violent, yet it's touching and tender as well.

FROM PAGE 125: "Okay. I closed my eyes. Who had I picked up at the Hyatt on Memorial Drive? Yeah, that was the salesman guy, the one who looked so uncomfortable that I'd figured he'd been hoping to ask his cabbie for a few pointers concerning the best skirt-chasing areas in our fair city. Too low a voice. Too broad in the beam." ◆

Traveler's Checks

Most London museums are free, but specialty exhibits may cost extra.

Though Tauck hosts a number of different London tours, it offers a similar itinerary in May 2014.

FANCY THAT: The Langham hotel opened in 1865 in London.

The Escape Artist / Hannah Sheinberg

QUEEN OF ARTS

THE VICTORIAN ERA LIVES ON IN LONDON.

BOSTON AND LONDON HAD A ROCKY relationship after we dumped a spot of their tea into our harbor. By the next century, the British didn't pay attention to us anymore, because as we dealt with the Civil War, they underwent one of the most elegant and prosperous times in their nation's history. During the Victorian Era, which lasted from 1837 to 1901, England more than doubled in population and collected colonies like the current queen gathers corgis. But one of the more important developments in 1800s London was broad public access to the arts, a privilege previously reserved for the wealthy. While the Victorians were avid imperialists abroad, at home in London, culture was the dominant force.

Tauck, a luxury tour company in operation since 1925, offers a London itinerary that showcases Victoria's reign, along with other significant attractions from the city's history. Visitors can partake in many of the activities outside of the tour group, but Tauck includes behind-the-scenes looks at popular spots, high-profile speakers and commentary from Blue Badge guides, whose knowledge of the city rivals that of the London cabbies.

Since Queen Elizabeth doesn't rent out the rooms at Buckingham Palace, stay at the Langham hotel instead. A few blocks away from Oxford Circus, the sandy brick mansion opened in 1865, with Queen Vic's son, Edward VII, presiding over the opening ceremony. The hallways seem to be as long as the Thames River, and were actually designed so that lady trendsetters of the 1800s wouldn't cause a hallway traffic jam with their hoop skirts. Outfitted with Corinthian marble columns, baby pink bouquets and curlicue details, the Langham mixes royalty with Rococo.

The obvious Victorian destination is the V&A—the Victoria and Albert Museum—in South Kensington, which houses works of fine art and design, not artifacts from the couple's reign. In Victoria's time, a plaster copy of Michelangelo's David was brought to the museum, and the queen demanded there be a fig leaf placed over his nethers. Today's museum is much less prudish, and even currently houses a temporary exhibit called "Club to Catwalk: London Fashion in the 1980s," which showcases lots of Lycra, synthetic leather and chains—all of which would have clashed with the 19th-century high-neckline aesthetic. The featured '80s designers catered to the Culture Club crowd, taking cues from popular nightclubs of the time, like Blitz, Taboo and Camden Palace. See pieces by John Galliano, Vivienne Westwood and Katherine Hamnett, free of fig leaves.

For a peek inside royal life, visit Hampton Court Palace, a residence of Henry VIII, which is less gimmicky and crowded than many of its castle contemporaries. Tauck hosts private dinner parties for their guests there, but the estate is open to the public as well, thanks to Queen Victoria. At the beginning of her reign, she declared that Hampton Court "should be thrown open to her subjects without restriction," inviting visitors from all social strata. The high-class hunting lodge boasts acres of rolling hills, gaggles of geese and manicured gardens lined with Hershey's Kiss-shaped trees. The Great Hall is the most impressive room in the home, with vaulted ceilings that resemble a miniature cathedral, 16th-century Flemish tapestries and multiple mounted antlers. It's the type of place where you can imagine feeding a turkey leg to your hounds, or plotting to behead Anne Boleyn.

If palace life feels too isolated, head to Borough Market to get a better taste for London. Housed under railway arches in the city's Southwark neighborhood, this promised land for foodies has been in use since 1014, though its current art deco greenhouse-style building was constructed in the 1850s. Here, vendors encourage sampling, and you'll find steaming pans of paella, local cheeses, freshly sliced prosciutto, meat pies and Turkish delight, all under one glass ceiling.

While the Victorian elite ate petit fours in their stately playgrounds, the majority of the population lived in the soot of the slums. Charles Dickens, who was forced into factory work at the age of 12, exposed the forgotten lives of the lower-class Londoners. Tour his home at 48 Doughty St., where he lived from 1837 to 1839 and penned Nicholas Nickleby and Oliver Twist. His inspiration for the famous orphan story is only a few blocks away. The Foundling Hospital, which is now the Foundling Museum, housed the unwanted illegitimate children of unwed mothers from 1742 to 1954. Visitors can view artifacts and paintings that illustrate the harsh life at the original hospital, where the children were given new names so that they could never trace their origins. The gaps between classes made Victorian London truly a tale of two societies.

So while Will, Kate and baby George are London's current royal obsessions, the city is defined by the past. Everywhere you look, you'll find reminders of Victoria's longstanding reign. ◆

RAMEN REDUX

INAKA BROADENS BOSTON'S RANGE OF RAMEN OPTIONS.

INAKA JAPANESE RESTAURANT
72 Brighton Ave., Allston
(617-562-1668)
facebook.com/inakacafe

IF YOU SPENT THE LAST FEW YEARS UNDER A rock, you might marvel that The Improper's 2013 Fall Dining issue restaurant review is devoted to a ramen joint. "Ramen? The dollar instant-soup packet from my hungover college days? Ya gotta be kiddin' me." Presumably you have more finely tuned cultural antennae, and so you know that there's much more to ramen than its lowly just-add-water incarnation, that in fact it's kind of a big deal. The Japanese casual-restaurant version has risen in recent decades to cultish prominence both in its native country and worldwide. While Boston has long had a few ramen shops, ramen mania didn't really hit its stride here until 2012, when places as lofty as Uni Sashimi Bar debuted ramen menus and jiro ramen specialist Yume Wo Katare opened to lines around the block. Inaka Japanese Restaurant, a new 32-seat Allston spot, brings its own distinctive versions of this multifaceted soup, complementing them with a creditable array of other cooked dishes.

As fans of the brilliant food-geek movie Tampopo know, every element of a bowl of ramen—broth, noodles, seasonings, meats, vegetables—has to be good in its own way for it to rise above the level of pedestrian fast-food sustenance. Inaka's broth is based on a 10-hour chicken- and pork-bone stock that falls on the assari (light-bodied) end of the spectrum; it has a bit of the semi-opaque murk associated with tonkotsu broths, but isn't heavy with emulsified fat. Noodles are fresh, made in a New York factory and come in two versions: a thick, straight, al dente noodle that will likely be more familiar to Boston ramen fans, and the welcome novelty of a thinner, more tender Hakata-style noodle that absorbs flavors a bit better. Yakibuta ramen ($12.95) seasons the broth with shoyu (Japanese soy sauce) and features slices of delectable roast pork, lean enough to suggest loin rather than belly, plus a soft-boiled egg, sweet corn, cabbage, scallion, mung-bean sprouts, bamboo shoots, a spiral-decorated slice of narutomaki (surimi fishcake) and a square of nori (dried compressed seaweed) for a bit of oceany brininess. This is a hefty, gorgeous bowl of ramen by itself, but benefits aromatically from small additions of the tableside condiments: grated raw garlic, togarashi (a Japanese chili powder heavy with sesame seeds) and sesame oil infused with sansho (Sichuan peppercorns). Miso ramen ($12.95) is similarly composed but replaces the saltier zing of shoyu with the earthy, nutty flavor of fermented soybeans; it's also available in a "spicy" version and a vegetarian version that substitutes water for the pork/chicken stock.

While ramen is the star here, the supporting cast chips in ably, notably in a couple of outstanding appetizers. Yaki gyoza ($6.75) are a half-dozen pork/vegetable dumplings, pan-fried to a lovely mahogany and served with a shoyu/rice-vinegar dipping sauce; a hefty dose of garlic pushes these beauties over the top. Takoyaki ($4.75) consists of four golf-ball-size croquettes of octopus in a béchamel batter, griddled golden and topped with bonito flakes and a squiggle of Kewpie mayo—crunchy, creamy, savory, smoky, delightful. Inaka fries ($6.95) take julienned purple Okinawan sweet potatoes and fry them tempura-style, yielding a pretty if rather bland vehicle for their spicy-mayo dip.

The donburi (rice bowl) selection includes a couple of standouts. Eel don ($12.50) is a substantial single fillet of grilled sea eel coated with the familiar sweet sauce that is unagi (shoyu, mirin, sugar), flanked with some seaweed salad and a couple of daikon slices atop some excellent rice. Ahiru ($9.95) is another winner, a stir-fry of lean duck breast and asparagus in another rich, sweetish soy-based sauce. Heartier eaters can opt for the katsu combo ($14.50), a heap of breaded and fried jumbo shrimp and cutlets of chicken and pork, plus a scoop of that fine rice. Curry katsu ($14.50) improves on this by adding a typical Japanese brown curry sauce, like a slightly sweeter rendition of a North Indian curry based on garam masala. Drink options include bottled Japanese soft drinks ($3) like heavily sweetened milk teas and coffees, as well as bottled water ($2) and American sodas ($1.25).

The bright, spare dining room is modestly decorated with banners and dried flowers. Service is enthusiastic and friendly, if not always deeply versed in the nuances of the menu. Fortunately, the owner is usually on hand and happy to regale diners with the details of his cuisine. In all, Inaka represents a useful step forward for Boston's burgeoning ramen scene, presenting its ramen in a more traditionally subtle, understated style that doesn't push the hot buttons (absurdly limited seating! pork fat overload!) associated with the food-nerd frenzy of the past year or two. Bostonians finally appear ready for a world of diverse ramen options without the hype, and as long as the purveyors' products are as satisfying as Inaka's, that's a very good thing. ◆

Q: I AM CONSIDERING HAVING A LITTLE FILLER PUT IN MY LIPS; IS THAT SAFE, DOES IT HURT?

A: Yes, it is extremely safe as long as you go to a well-trained physician or injector who has had a lot of experience working with fillers. Your lips will look totally natural and the only person who will know you have had filler is you! (Unless you tell them.)

The key is to take a conservative approach and not to inject too much filler. It's also important to use a filler that is that is soft, pliable, and natural-looking. Our favorite lip fillers at SkinHealth are Restylane, Juvederm Ultra and Belotero.

Lip injections actually don't hurt due to the fact that lidocaine, a numbing agent, is mixed into the fillers. You feel a little pinch, but that is it. Don't be afraid to give it a try: the key is a conservative approach. The results can be stunning!

ENOUGH SAID ★★★½
Starring Julia Louis-Dreyfus, James Gandolfini, Catherine Keener, Tavi Gevinson, Tracey Fairaway, Ben Falcone and Toni Collette Written and directed by Nicole Holofcener
At Coolidge Corner Theatre, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs

GRACEFUL GOODBYE

ENOUGH SAID SHOWS A SENSITIVE SIDE OF THE LATE JAMES GANDOLFINI.

LAST MONTH DURING THE EMMYS I WAS AT A bar, where multiple massive TVs blared sporting events, music was blasting and the awards telecast was shown on one of the small televisions in the corner. Nobody paid much mind, until Edie Falco arrived onscreen and delivered her heartfelt tribute to James Gandolfini. Our waitress quickly bolted to the stereo console, killed the music and cranked the volume so all could hear. "Sorry," she shrugged. "I just loved him." Nobody in the bar said a word. We all loved him.

Which is why Enough Said, a delightful romantic comedy from writer-director Nicole Holofcener that features the actor's second-to-last performance, is so bittersweet. It's a wonderful movie—funny, sad and wise about the crazy ways we torment ourselves in this thing called love. But unlike most synthetic rom-coms, this is a movie uniquely attuned to the weary rhythms of middle age, about finding love when you've already been around the block a few times and would happily settle for just about anything else.

Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as Eva, a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a tony Los Angeles neighborhood. She's long divorced, and with her daughter Ellen (Tracey Fairaway) headed for college soon, the empty nest is looming large on the horizon. It's at a swanky party that Eva meets Marianne (Catherine Keener), a know-it-all poet—yes, that's how she really makes her living—who drops famous names and breezes along in self-obsessed isolation while expressing blithe indifference to her fans.

Eva envies Marianne something fierce, eventually going to work and drooling over the lady of letters' lavish living space and random phone calls from Joni Mitchell. She listens to her client's constant grousing about her obese bum of an ex-husband, Albert, with every sloppy character quirk berated for hours as a crime against humanity.

Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as Eva, a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a tony Los Angeles neighborhood.

What Eva doesn't know is that she already met Albert at that very same party, and played with winning vulnerability by James Gandolfini, he's almost something of a hunk. Sure, Albert's a slovenly guy who hates onions and digs around the guacamole with his tortilla chips trying to avoid them. He doesn't think much of housewares, and his weird aversion to end tables provides ripe comic fodder. But he's also a kind, dear man, beat up by life a bit and thus now totally comfortable in his own skin.

Eva and Albert hit it off almost immediately, and the great joy of Enough Said is watching their seemingly opposite comic rhythms fall into a gorgeous synchronicity. Louis-Dreyfus, who has starred in so many television series over the years without ever tackling a lead movie role like this one, is a bag of jangled nerves. She's always talking herself into corners and desperately overcompensating afterward. Gandolfini is, by contrast, adorably relaxed. He's a big, slightly sad guy who seems to have already settled for his lot in life years ago, now surprised and delighted by the sudden arrival of this neurotic mess.

Their chemistry is magic. She's all sharp right angles, and he's a round Barcalounger Buddha. Eva and Albert's first date is one of the more purely pleasurable sequences I have seen all year, as we watch two hesitant, jaded people feel each other out and then lock into a delightful rhythm. "I'm tired of being funny," she sighs, much later in bed. He wearily agrees. "But you're not funny," she adds, with a wry smile.

The sitcom contrivance here is that Eva doesn't know her new best friend (Keener) is also Albert's ex-wife until far too late, when she's already heard an earful about his more regrettable tendencies. She can't stop listening to their tales of woe, because Eva doesn't trust this new thing she's found and is more than happy to let somebody else tear him down for hours on end. That's easier than commitment.

Ever since her 1996 debut, Walking and Talking, Holofcener has specialized in modest, prickly character studies (usually starring her alter-ego, Catherine Keener) sympathetic to a self-sabotaging sort of moneyed upper-middle class. Like her wonderful 2010 film, Please Give, Enough Said is a crackling comedy in which nobody can help themselves from saying exactly the wrong thing.

For those who still haven't quite gotten over Gandolfini's sudden death this summer (particularly myself), the movie feels like both a gift and a cruel tease of all the roles that he would never get to play. Miles away from Tony Soprano, this is a sharp, funny, self-possessed and strangely sexy man, courtly enough to ask Louis-Dreyfus: "When I'm on top of you, can you still breathe?"

I loved him. We all did. ◆

ELECTRIC LADYLAND

JANELLE MONÁE ENVISIONS A WORLD OF EMPOWERMENT AND ECLECTICISM YOU CAN DANCE TO.

JANELLE MONÁE plays House of Blues
on Oct 16

JANELLE MONÁE CASTS A STRIKING VISAGE between her puffy pompadour and tuxedo-esque uniform, a high-fashion update on the black-and-white palette of a maid, her former job as a working-class youth in Kansas City. Today it's her look as a spokeswoman for CoverGirl.

But Monáe's dominant arena for dazzle remains her music, an out-of-this-world cyclone of funk, soul, hip-hop and pop that flies as high as the singer's sci-fi ambitions. She advanced the storyline of her robotic alter-ego Cindi Mayweather on The ArchAndroid, one of 2010's best albums, a stylistically schizoid spectacle with cameos led by her OutKast mentor Big Boi.

She's picked up that thread with increased accessibility on The Electric Lady. That album, which debuted on Billboard's Top 200 last month, includes turns by Prince, Erykah Badu, Miguel and Esperanza Spalding on top of her Technicolor co-production with Nate "Rocket" Wonder, Chuck Lightning and Roman GianArthur, collaborators in her Atlanta-based Wondaland Arts Society.

"I say this very humbly, but the musicianship on here is just not to be touched or compared," Monáe says of The Electric Lady. "We put a lot of thought and hard work into this music, and at the end of the day, history will show itself. That's all we really care about—and innovation as a directive for an artist. You never know when you expire, when you're gone. You just want your work to travel on to the next generation."

Monáe, 27, delights in evoking the past and the future. She's aware of her own roots, drawing musical inspiration from Prince, Parliament-Funkadelic, Stevie Wonder, Michael Jackson and Jimi Hendrix as well as Brazilian bossa nova and movie soundtracks. She also embraces visual artists like surrealist Salvador Dalí and sci-fi films topped by Fritz Lang's Metropolis.

"I've been a lover of science fiction since I was a little girl—from age 7 or 8, I used to watch The Twilight Zone with my grandmother," Monáe says from a tour stop in Ireland. "There are limitless possibilities in science fiction, in the stories."

She taps those possibilities in her continuing tale of an android fighting a totalitarian society called the Great Divide. On Monáe's latest installments to the story, Mayweather falls in love with a human, which naturally raises opposition. In a fictional radio interlude on The Electric Lady, a caller even pipes, "Robot love is queer!"

"When I think of the android, I think about 'the other,'" Monáe says. "You could compare the android to being a woman or being gay or lesbian, or being in the minority of a majority, or being an immigrant... I always want to use my music as my message to challenge the idea of those who do not accept people for who they are."

Women certainly fuel The Electric Lady, from the dreams of "Ghetto Woman" to the booty-shaking single "Q.U.E.E.N.," where Monáe romps with Badu and raps, "Categorize me, I defy every label." As for the inspiration behind the album name, Monáe slips into her sci-fi persona. "My paintings underwater were a portal into the future of this album," she says. "In my second life, I was a visual artist. I was painting, drawing silhouettes of many different women. When I started to look back at them, I was painting women from different aspects of their lives."

"I grew up in church, I grew up a Baptist kid, and my grandmothers both played organ, so I'll never lose my soul and my rhythm."

Along the way, the album pulls closer to R&B. "We go a lot of places, but as a root, as a foundation, it's the best fit," says the singer/rapper, who'll bring her boundless energy and a large band to House of Blues on Oct. 16. "I grew up in church, I grew up a Baptist kid, and my grandmothers both played organ, so I'll never lose my soul and my rhythm."

The softer side of that style, particularly in outright love songs like "PrimeTime" with crooner Miguel, also suggests the new album has wider potential for airplay. "I'm focusing on making timeless, classic music that will touch people's hearts and spirits," she says. "I'm not thinking of radio. I'm not thinking about the politics behind it. I like to focus on ideas that will last." ◆

HAPPY TRAILS

THE IMPORTANCE OF TROUBLESOME TRAVEL

THERE ARE TIMES WHEN YOU WILL be invited to special events that will involve travel, which can be a pain in the neck. And you'll say no because it's inconvenient. Then you'll hear reports from people about how great the event was, and how it should not have been missed. For years, I would take the lazy way out, refusing various invitations so I could stay home and not bother. When my wife Susan died, and travel became solo, I woke up one day and said, "Never look back on anything that sounds special and say, 'I should have gone to that concert,' 'I should have gone to that playoff game in Dallas,' 'I should've gone on that theater tour in London with fellow nonprofit board members.' " Because going to pain-in-the-neck destinations isn't only illuminating; it can change your life in interesting ways.

In the past year, I was invited to a black-tie dinner at the Hearst Castle in San Simeon, Calif., hosted by the Hearst family. This involved flying to San Francisco and driving or puddle jumping in a plane to a town near the destination, then renting a car there. To me, traveling 3,000 miles for a party is the definition of a pain in the neck, particularly when a 45-minute flight from San Francisco to San Luis Obispo turns into an eight-hour logistical nightmare. But I traveled with a man in his mid-40s who told me stories of his generation, his anxieties and fears about challenging times in careers and relationships, and his hopes for the future. These conversations alone made the trip worthwhile.

William Randolph Hearst was, of course, a legend in American business. And a legend in his own right—he was the model for the Charles Foster Kane character in Citizen Kane. The actual castle, particularly seen at night in all its haunting splendor, surrounded by people in formal clothes, made me feel as if I had chewed on a magic mushroom and landed back in the 1920s, glamorous and decadent. Cocktails were served around the indoor pool, all brilliant blue below the waterline and looking as if Roman emperors had cavorted there. There was dinner in a baronial banquet hall, with lots of toasts. There was dancing around the long trestle table and people making friends. I spent time with several puppeteers from The Muppets, a late-night TV host and the current namesake of the original press baron. William Randolph Hearst wove tales for me of his family, of California politics and the state's stewardship of the castle. I would have missed it all if I took the easy and comfortable option of staying at home.

Last winter I finally said yes to urgings from friends to visit them in Rome. Post-9/11 changes and the financial meltdowns add up to make air travel a nightmare of frustration. And traveling alone after my wife died, I was without my rock. She referred to herself as "Susan Spooner, Senior Cartographer," because she paid attention to everything, while I watched people and tried to imagine them melting into characters I could write about. I've known all my life that I'm a klutz, and I think I'm afraid of trusting to the kindness of strangers. But I believed even more in not looking back and saying, "I should've gone to Rome."

So I did. My friends had immersed themselves in the language, history, food, wine and people of Rome. They were my docents, guides and personal shoppers, forcing me to try speaking Italian. The wife had written four great cookbooks and gave dinner parties for me in their apartment overlooking the Vatican. The husband had grown up in Brooklyn as a student of history and character, and he gave me so much of the sort of local trivia that only a Brooklyn boy could give—funny, full of irony and observations that taught me more about Rome than any guidebook.

When I returned to Boston I had emails from two people I had met in Rome. One of them, an ex-pat for many years, decided she needed help managing her money and became a client with a seven-figure account. The other person, a young woman from Turkey who was traveling through Europe going to operas, now swaps emails with me, full of wisdom about all things Turkish and, as a side bar, special insights into the Middle East. Priceless.

Never reject an out-of-town adventure because you're too busy, or it's too troublesome. Be curious and be out there, interested in how other cultures exist or disappear. It can enrich you in ways you never could have predicted. ◆

IN THE STREAM

MY ATTEMPT TO DITCH CABLE

FOR THE PAST FEW MONTHS, I'VE KEPT hearing about Roku. First, one friend bought a Roku, then another, until it soon seemed as if I was the only one missing out on the Roku revolution. "Ha ha ha," the Roku people would say. "You're paying how much for DirecTV? Well, at least it goes out when the weather's bad and you have a big dish on a pole in your backyard." I haven't felt this uncool since I wore purple jeans to school on the first day of 11th grade.

The Roku, if you're not yet a convert, is a little black box that gives you streaming TV. It comes with a remote and allows easy access to more shows than you'll ever have time to watch. We buy two Rokus, hook them up and join the wonderful world of Netflix. Now we're saving more than $100 a month while catching up with the hijinks of those zany lesbians on Orange Is the New Black. There's just one problem: It's football season.

Roku can give you anything you want as long as you don't want the NFL. After Week 1, I get so desperate that I sign up for the Verizon NFL app, which streams a couple of games a week on your phone. But watching football on a phone is about as satisfying as watching a game on the moon through your telescope. The football is three electrons long, and a first down is 10 microns. I try to outsmart the NFL by plugging the phone into my TV, but when the app senses my subterfuge it immediately shuts down the broadcast. If I'm lucky, that's all it does. I'm half worried that Ray Lewis is now on his way to have a word with me about my screen-mirroring gambit.

I lament my sad football-deprived existence to my friend Steve, who replies, "If only there were some sort of place you could go that had TVs showing the games. Perhaps such a place would even serve beer." Embracing Steve's approach, I venture out to a bar to watch the Patriots' game. Every seat is taken, and I end up standing behind a guy who's about 6 feet, 3 inches tall and prone to standing with his hands interlocked behind his head, in the manner of a shirtless meth-head getting frisked on the hood of a Crown Vic. I watch the first half through the crook of his left elbow before heading home to injure my eyes squinting at NFL Redzone on my phone.

Which brings me to the antenna. Back on Roku setup day, I tried using a digital antenna to pull in the network broadcasts the old-fashioned way. All I got was one channel that looked like scrambled porn but turned out, upon further inspection, to be PBS. Digital antennas are supposed to give you HDTV, but the static-besmirched mess on my screen was like watching This Old House after falling off the top of Norm Abram's tallest stepladder. It dawned on me that I'd need to resort to drastic measures. I'd need to get an outdoor antenna.

Nearly a decade after trashing the useless disco-era roof antenna lashed to my chimney in Southie, here I am climbing up to my roof gutter carrying a hunk of metal that looks like something a 1950s movie Martian would use as a ray gun. I aim it using a compass—sure, it's the compass on my iPhone, but I still feel like an old-timey shipwreck survivor trying to send a Mayday using a coconut and an empty can of Moxie.

Here I am climbing up to my roof gutter carrying a hunk of metal that looks like something a 1950s movie Martian would use as a ray gun.

Yet, when I return to the living room and scan for channels, I see a miraculous thing: trashy daytime television. I've never been so happy to see Wendy Williams. And Judge Judy. And, strangely enough, commercials. Burger King has something called Satisfries? It's satisfrying to know about that, BK!

And, of course, I've got football back where it belongs: In my living room, where I can plow into a plate of nachos from the comfort of my couch without concern for any nettlesome social interaction.

So, after investing in Roku and my Marvin the Martian antenna, I'm officially a cord-cutter. Except that isn't exactly an accurate term, since the whole streaming-TV strategy is enabled by the sturdy coaxial cable that delivers your high-speed Internet. And that, I suspect, is ultimately where the trouble lies. My buddy Doyle, a fellow Roku-and-antenna embracer, told me: "It's only a matter of time before the cable companies figure out what everyone's doing and just jack the price of Internet access. But I think we have a few good years before that happens."

And when it does, perhaps I'll peacefully resubmit to the bundled cable package. I do miss Boardwalk Empire. ◆

Soroff On / Tom Perrotta

NOVEL IDEAS

THE AUTHOR TELLS US ABOUT WRITER'S BLOCK, RITUALS AND TOBIAS WOLFF.

BEST-SELLING AUTHOR TOM PERROTTA, 52, WAS BORN and raised in New Jersey and graduated from Yale. He received a master's degree in writing at Syracuse and then embarked on a career as an academic and a novelist. While teaching at Harvard, he published his novel Election, which was adapted into a hit movie starring Reese Witherspoon and Matthew Broderick. Perrotta has since written numerous novels, including Little Children, The Wishbones, Joe College, The Abstinence Teacher and, most recently, The Leftovers, which is being adapted into an HBO series. He was nominated for an Academy Award for his screenplay adaptation of Little Children. He lives in Belmont and will appear at the Boston Book Festival on Oct. 19.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Three things you need to write?
TOM PERROTTA: Coffee, coffee and coffee.

Any rituals to your writing? Well, there's a lot of ritual time-wasting. I also have a fountain pen in reserve, which I like to fill up and use as a token of my seriousness.

Ever get writer's block? Every day. If the fountain pen doesn't work, you have to let your self-loathing reach a critical mass and spur you to action.

Election* was about the pettiness of politics. Is that because the stakes are so low? Well, the stakes in real politics are pretty high. This was a high school election where the stakes were low. What I wanted to show was that some of those cutthroat personalities make themselves known in really low-stakes situations, as well.

Did Little Children make your neighbors act weird around you? They were acting weird before that.

Most odious thing about writing? Oh, God, there's so much self-doubt and insecurity involved. Every day you have to face the possibility that what you're doing is a fool's errand, or even worse, that it's an important job and you're not up to it.

Favorite author? Well, I was lucky enough to study with Tobias Wolff when I was in graduate school, and he's been a model for me as a writer, a teacher and just a really good person.

What's the single quality that all good writers share? I think there's an open-mindedness and willingness to question yourself. It's a combination of vulnerability and independent thinking.

Is there someone in the literary canon whom you consider overrated? I know I'm probably going to get in trouble for this, but I was never a big Salinger fan. Holden reminded me of a lot of prep school jerks I knew in college.

Three books you'd bring if you were stranded on a deserted island? Don Quixote, Anna Karenina and... How to Get Off of a Deserted Island.

Is there a book you wish you'd written? I'd have to go with The Great Gatsby.

How do you think the business of writing and publishing books has changed? I think literary culture has suffered in recent years. It's harder to get books published in the traditional route. You can self-publish. You can put things through on Amazon. But I think it's harder to break through the sort of wall of content overload, which gets bigger and bigger every day. It's easier to exist but harder to be noticed.

"A lot of my friends said they thought it should have been 'American jack-off.'"

Do you enjoy screenwriting as much as writing novels? No. I still think my real life as a writer is writing fiction and creating something from the ground up. But what I love about screenwriting is the collaboration. It's a real antidote to the loneliness of sitting in a room day after day by yourself to write a 300- or 400-page book. As a teenager, I had this idea that a rock band was this ideal community where you made art with other people. I was never good enough to do that with music, but I get that collaboration with screenwriting. Collaboration can be risky, but I find it rewarding.

The New York Times* once called you "an American Chekhov." How do you feel about that? A lot of my friends said they thought it should have been "American jack-off."

Is dialogue the hardest thing to write? No. I'm a little challenged in terms of descriptive writing. That's one of the reasons I enjoy screenwriting. In a novel, I'd spend a whole day describing what the park looks like at night. In a screenplay, all I have to do is write, "Park. Night."

So the expository part is tougher? Yes. I think in the 19th century, before we had cameras everywhere and knew what the world looked like photographically, it was hugely important for writers to describe the world. I think it's less important now, and generally speaking, I prefer to under-do it than overdo it.

So are you a writer with a very strong sense of place? No. I often can't decide in my own mind if I'm writing about New Jersey or Massachusetts. So I kind of leave it blank. If you notice, in my more recent novels, I don't specify states, and I don't think that suburbia in Massachusetts is wildly divergent than suburbia in New Jersey. But I'm obviously writing in some way about a composite suburbia. I'm not a regionalist.

Worst writing job you ever had? I once ghost-wrote a teen horror novel. It was one of those experiences I return to in my mind whenever I feel blocked or lazy. I remember that I got up every day and wrote this really terrible teen horror novel. ◆

THERE WILL BE SPUD

A tribute to the wondrous tuber

— BY THE IMPROPER STAFF —

LONG DISMISSED

as the khaki pants of the culinary world, the humble potato is the definition of staple, of comfort food. Yet no other dish is so versatile. It can be roasted, mashed, smashed, tater totted, hash browned, french fried, chipped, wedged, scalloped, latke-ed, poutined, gnocchied, croquetted…to say nothing of its iterations in soups, breads, salads, poitín and vodka. The list is googleplexic.

SPUD TRANSIT GLORIA

In truth, the potato is the universal vegetable. The average human being eats 73 pounds of spuds per annum. (Americans eat about double that, which is still nothing compared to European consumption.) The world's fourth-largest edible crop, it's tremendously efficient at producing nutrition per unit of cultivated land. It's the reason we have ketchup.

The Andean peoples were the first to cultivate the plant, possibly dating back 10,000 years. In the middle of the 16th century, the Spanish introduced potatoes to Europe, forever changing the history of side dishes. President Thomas Jefferson—who called for potatoes to be served French-style at the White House—is credited with bringing french fries to the United States, but the potato had long been grown in the colonies, with its first planting in North America traced to Derry, N.H., in 1719.

When the Great Potato Famine hit Ireland in the middle of the 19th century, Boston's influx of Irish immigrants molded our reputation as a meat-and-potatoes town. But times change, and with them, dining habits. Even as menus sprout with ivory lentils, quinoa and truffled mac 'n' cheese, the potato abides. The most refined kitchen doesn't shirk at fingerlings, and gluten-free mania keeps the spud in its rightful prominence. Yet, unlike amaranth, it never puts on airs.

And where would America be without our potato-influenced icons? Boozehound Spuds McKenzie, former NBA player Spud Webb and, most importantly, Mr. Potato Head, marketed by Rhode Island–based Hasbro and born from the idea that kids like to play with their food. You don't see a Mr. Basmati Rice Head in the store, do you?

Our civilization is rooted in the moist, nourishing dirt of the potato farm. In this spud-centric package, we pay homage to the chip, the frite, the glorious gratin dauphinois.

All hail the almighty tuber.

POTATO FACTS

16th

CENTURY IN WHICH POTATOES WERE INTRODUCED TO EUROPE

Q & A CHOOSING SIDES

Jay Murray, executive chef at Grill 23 and Bar, talks potatoes, steak and how the two were meant for each other.

What is the difference between steak fries and steak frites? Steak fries are usually quarter wedges of a whole potato that are deep-fried, or just very, very large fries in general. Steak frites is a French dish, which usually consists of a cut of beef that's served with fries that are preferably made in house. It's basically steak and french fries.

Is there a reason behind serving hash browns and tater tots at an upscale steak restaurant? Hash browns were here when I got here 15 years ago, but I just really wanted to make tater tots. The potatoes get all soft again, and it's like having your mashed potatoes encapsulated in a little crust.

What is your most popular side dish? It's probably still mashed potatoes; it may actually be tater tots. Maybe half and half.

Do you think there's a best side for each different kind of steak? French fries go great with almost any steak because they soak up all the juices. The ones underneath where the steak was, those are the best ones. The tater tots go with all of them, too. I think any potato goes with any steak.

How is the movement toward green, grass-fed steaks affecting the way people eat their potatoes? We're probably the first place in town to switch to all meat with no antibiotics or hormones. I haven't noticed our customers care, which is tough because I care about it quite a bit. One thing I've noticed about potatoes here is at the height of the Atkins diet, potatoes in general were cut probably 70 percent.

True or false: Meat and potatoes complete each other, yet people are still afraid to say yes to carbs. Yes, they do. I think if you're gonna go carb, just go for it.

These coiled fries are deep-fried and seasoned with Spike's own salt blend, a proprietary recipe that local franchise owner Dave Gettleman guards like a dog. Go all out with the cheese and chili extras.

VARENIKI TASTING SAMPLE, $10

The six potato dumplings from chef Fred Dinov arrive in a pinwheel presentation, and the Ukrainian-style dish will get your head spinning. A tender noodle shell encases a moist dollop of potato that slides right down your mouth. Each dumpling is accompanied by a thinly sliced mushroom and fried onion and topped with sour cream. Don't forget to chew.

▲ HOMEMADE FINGERLING POTATO CHIP NIGIRI, $18

One of the standouts at chef Tim Cushman's shrine to exquisite sushi doesn't include seafood. A finger-ling potato chip is made in house, lightly salted and placed atop a bed of rice. The dish is finished off with a mayo and a shaved truffle that changes each season, with fall calling for an Australian winter truffle.

YUKON POTATO MASCARPONE MASH, $8

This rich and creamy side is everything you want from mashed potatoes. New executive chef Mark Allen (former owner of the now-closed Le Soir in Newton) uses house-made mascarpone to add extra decadence to the crowd favorite, and it fits right in on the new menu.

▲ BEEF TENDERLOIN, MASHED POTATO & WHITE TRUFFLE OIL PIZZA, $24

French favorite Mistral celebrated its sweet 16 this year, and we're happy that classics like this perfect high-low mix of a pie aren't going anywhere. Crisp and bubbly from the grill, the thin crust comes topped with rare slices of beef, potato and drizzled truffle oil. Available on the dinner and late-night menus, it's haute bar food ideal to fuel or finish an evening.

POUTINE-STYLE TWICE BAKED "LOADED" POTATO, $12

Chef Chris Coombs bakes this spud hybrid twice, stuffs it with gravy, cheese curds, bacon, chives and herbs and then tops his masterpiece off with sour cream and crispy potato skins. The result: the rare steakhouse side that's as satisfying as your rib-eye.

REIBEKUCHEN, $11

We're told the name comes from the words "reibe" (to rub or grate) and "kuchen" (cake), but we're pretty sure Tim Wiechmann's take on central Germany's potato pancake translates to "damn delicious." Freshly grated potato and horseradish are bound with a touch of crème fraîche, then pan-seared to a golden brown. "The trick is for them to not fall apart!" says Wiechmann, who finishes the starter with sweet-and-sour shallots, roasted pear and curried corn puree.

▼ PRUNE-STUFFED GNOCCHI, $21

A 12-year run on No. 9 Park's menu crowns this Northern Italian-inspired recipe as the restaurant's best-seller. Traditional gnocchi dough made with riced Idaho potatoes is stuffed with a prune filling that's been marinated in Vin Santo. Once the pasta's boiled, it's glazed in a whipped cream of foie gras, butter and spices. Take chef de cuisine Scott Jones' word that this rich dish is not for the faint of heart.

PATATAS BRAVAS, $8

There are so many tapas you'll want to sample at Toro, but the must-haves—such as the patatas bravas—always take precedent. The fried potatoes are good on their own, but mixed with aioli and spicy tomato sauce, it's a plate you'll hope the staff doesn't clear too quickly so you can soak up the last drops with your bread. With flavors like this, it's no wonder Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette opened up another location in New York (and that one takes reservations!).

GRATIN DAUPHINOIS, $8

A new addition to executive chef Robert Sisca's menu at Bistro du Midi, gratin dauphinois is a regional dish fit for the approaching cooler temperatures. Peeled Yukon Gold potatoes—sliced thinly on a mandolin, but not too thin—are combined with milk, cream, shallots, garlic and thyme. Baked for an hour in a buttered pan, it all arrives topped with caramelized Gruyère cheese.

TATER TOT PLATTER, $11 ▶

The Lower Depths doesn't just have a stacked selection of brews: The Kenmore Square watering hole also has five different combos for topping your tots. The Mexicana option includes deep-fried tater tots, melted queso fresco, pickled jalapeños and fire-roasted tomato salsa and guacamole, both made fresh daily. Ditch the Tecate, and instead pair the dish with a Brooklyn Lager to complement the spice.

▲ BACON-GRUYÈRE POTATO SKINS, $6

PARK frequently changes up its rightly ballyhooed bacon three-way, but we're glad this bacon-studded side is always on the menu. "It's kind of a cross between a loaded baked potato and potato skins," says chef Mark Goldberg of his spin on the pub standby. "We bake potatoes, and then we wedge them and fry them to order, so they're crispy on the outside but still potatoey on the inside." Gruyère cream sauce, applewood-smoked bacon and scallions complete the package.

SWEET STARCHES

America's Thanksgiving tables have been mislabeled. While many eaters may think sweet potatoes and yams are different, the ones we find at Shaw's are actually variations of the same food. Real yams, which span more than 600 species, are a whole other sack of potatoes (the original mix-up was because of a mistranslation of an African word). Here's a chart that gets to the root of the matter.

Sweet Potatoes	Yams
Ipomoea batatas	Dioscoreaceae
Tubers that are cultivated in many tropical and warm temperate regions	Larger root vegetables that are mainly cultivated in West Africa
6-8 inches long, on average	Over a foot long
Flesh is generally orange but can be purple or other hues	White or yellowish flesh
High in vitamin A and potassium	High in potassium
Served baked, fried, sautéed or even raw	Served peeled and boiled, fried or roasted (they're poisonous when eaten raw)
Great with marshmallows, brown sugar and cinnamon	Great with spices like coriander or cumin

LOCAL COLORS

HISTORY: It's speculated that the first round white potatoes in North America were grown in Derry, N.H., in the early 1700s by the Irish/Scottish settlers.

DESCRIPTION: These round potatoes have white skin and white flesh, hence the name. Their flavor is mildly sweet, with a low sugar content.

BEST USE: Though they can be baked, fried, boiled or roasted, these are especially tasty in potato salad.

GROWN AT: Young Family Farm (Little Compton, R.I.)

HISTORY: A variety of the russet potato, the russet Burbank was first developed by horticulturist Luther Burbank of Massachusetts in the early 1870s.

DESCRIPTION: Russets have a slightly flattened oval shape with brown skin and pale yellow flesh, producing an earthy flavor.

BEST USE: Its low-moisture and high-starch content make it excellent for french fries.

GROWN AT: Maiewski Farm (South Deerfield)

HISTORY: First cultivated in Peru, the red potato was then brought to Europe by Spanish sailors.

DESCRIPTION: Red potato skin is smooth and thin with white flesh inside. The wavy texture keeps the flesh firm throughout the cooking process.

BEST USE: Commonly used for mashed potatoes because of the waxy flesh, it contains less starch and more moisture.

GROWN AT: Red Apple Farm (Phillipston)

The case for sipping spuds

The U.S. government defines vodka as "neutral spirits so distilled, or so treated after distillation with charcoal or other materials, as to be without distinctive character, aroma, taste or color." We're not sure Uncle Sam qualifies as a discerning drinker. Subtle but, yes, distinctive variations exist, and that may be particularly true in the case of potato vodkas, which make up a tiny fraction of the vodka market—less than one percent—but shouldn't be overlooked.

Consider New England's own homegrown potato vodka. Donnie Thibodeau, the owner of Green Thumb Farms in Fryeburg, Maine, first dreamed up the idea about a decade ago, when then-trendy low-carb diets were putting a dent in his spud sales. Now more than 11 pounds of his Norwis round-white potatoes go into producing each bottle of Cold River Vodka, launched in 2005 with three other partners, including head distiller Chris Dowe. "We mash them up and make them into a potato soup," Dowe explains. The soup is fermented into a potato wine—"not very tasty, but it is chock full of alcohol"—which is distilled, filtered and mixed with water from that namesake river.

That's the short version, anyway. "It's inherently more difficult to make any alcohol with potato," Dowe says. "It's very hard to break down, so you have to put a lot more effort into getting it to be converted into sugars and then converting that to alcohol." Furthering complicating the process is Cold River's use of a copper still, which helps remove sulfur compounds but is trickier to clean than stainless steel. But Dowe thinks the extra effort is worth it. "You have a flavor to it that's very distinct," he says. "You do get that in most potato vodkas. There's still an earthy sort of tone to them most of the time."

Local bar legend Brother Cleve agrees. "Potatoes come from within the earth, and grains more regularly used in vodka (wheat, rye, barley, corn) are above the earth, in the air basically. So the flavor profile to potato vodka is earthier, less sweet, perhaps one could say a little dustier. Fairly dry with a long and almost peppery, creamy finish," he says. "There's less of that alcohol burn with the potato. It may be because, to my palate, I can really taste the potato itself in the finish. The mouthfeel in potato vodka is a bit richer and more viscous as well. In certain ways it has a bit more elegance. The savory quality is the key."

Looking to try a bottle? Brother Cleve recommends Luksusowa ("for the best bang for the buck"), Chopin Potato and Glacier ("pricier but very smooth"), Karlsson's and 44° North Huckleberry Vodka. "Potato vodka is amazing in savory cocktails, so try it in a bloody mary!" he adds. "Or put a new twist on a martini." At left is an original recipe for the latter he whipped up for us one night.

Six stellar dishes from the uncommon cuts of a cow

BY ANDREW RIMAS
PHOTOGRAPHED BY ANTHONY TIEULI

TRIPPA E LUMACHE (TRIPE AND SNAILS) // Coppa

"Ken and Jamie did versions of this at Clio and Toro," says Coppa's chef di cuisine, Meghann Ward.

"This one is definitely Southeast Asian–inspired." The tripe is braised overnight with pigs' feet and chicken stock, after which the liquid is turned into green curry broth and used to rebraise the meat and escargots. "It's a little bit sweet and spicy, and super aromatic," Ward says. "The tripe is really soft, so the escargot gives bite and chewiness. It's a creative combination."

2 FOIE DE VEAU (CALF'S LIVER) // Petit Robert Bistro

Elegant and delicate, this Lyonnaise recipe elevates the natural flavors of the liver.

"Jacky [Robert] had this recipe since Maison Robert," says Petit Robert co-owner Loic Le Garrec. "It's very simple." Sauteed with caramelized onions, red wine vinegar, and salt and pepper, the meat's minerality is allowed to stand out. "It's a very old recipe, but so delicious," adds Le Garrec. "It comes with a slice of bacon to make it even more delicious."

3 RABO DE TORO (OXTAIL) // Taberna de Haro

Spanish oxtail stew is a testament to the power of braising.

"We use three wines: red, white and fino sherry," says Taberna de Haro owner and chef Deborah Hansen. "And, surprisingly, no garlic." Sourced from grass-fed River Rock Farm cattle, it's braised for four hours so the flavors concentrate into a quintessence of beef, best accompanied by an old gran reserva (Viña Tondonia 1994, if you can afford it). "I tried to exactly mimic the beautiful rabo de toro dishes I've had in Madrid," Hansen says. "I wanted to evoke that beautiful decadence, but it's without the iron of rare beef. It surpasses prime rib."

$17, TABERNA DE HARO, 999 BEACON ST., BROOKLINE
(617-277-8272) TABERNABOSTON.COM

4 GRILLED HERB-MARINATED HEART // Boston Chops

A godsend for cow connoisseurs, for carnivore purists.

"This plays into the concept of Boston Chops as equal appreciation for all the parts of the steer," says co-owner/chef Chris Coombs. And it's a dish worth appreciating. Prepped simply with olive oil, vinegar and an herb marinade, the meat is grilled rare and sliced thin. "Beef heart tastes like what steak tasted like 20 years ago," Coombs says. "It's flavorful and lean. Cattle were raised differently then—there was no marbling or fat content."

$10, BOSTON CHOPS, 1375 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON
(617-227-5011) BOSTONCHOPS.COM

KUNG PAO SWEETBREADS // The Sinclair

"I took my addiction to terrible take-out food and combined that with the silky texture of sweetbreads," says Sinclair chef Matt Cunningham.

His conceit was to rework a commonplace flavor—kung pao—with a food that most people rarely experience. "The salty and spicy sauce, matched with the crispy peanuts, pickled sprouts and almost creamy insides of the fried sweetbreads, makes for a hopefully interesting small plate." It's a creative, even witty, ménage of spice and subtlety, smooth and crunch.

$7, THE SINCLAIR, 52 CHURCH ST., CAMBRIDGE
(617-547-5200) SINCLAIRCAMBRIDGE.COM

BRAISED BEEF TONGUE TOAST // Russell House Tavern

"Tongue is a muscle that gets used a lot, so it's very lean and flavorful," says Russell House executive chef Tom Borgia.

Braised in chicken stock with red wine and mirepoix, the tongue is sliced thin, anchored on grilled Italian bread and capped with pungent Taleggio and a poached egg that's breaded and deep-fried. "You get crispy from the bread and egg," Borgia says. "The tongue is falling apart, and the yolk and cheese are just runny. There's a lot of textural and flavor variation."

A Leap in the Dark

IN JOSÉ MATEO BALLET Theatre's Shadows Fleeting, don't expect a fairy tale ending. The contemporary company opens its 28th season with a trio of dark and haunting ballets. Setting the barre high, founder and choreographer José Mateo presents a world premiere along with two previous works: Covens, set to music by James MacMillan, outlines a plot of love and deceit amid the throes of a witch hunt, while Dark Profiles features an angsty Beethoven fugue, following a woman whose secrets distance her from the object of her desire. With a cocktail in hand, audiences view the performance up close in cabaret-style seating. Sashay your way into the Sanctuary Theatre through Oct. 27. / Maria Scenna

PERFORMING ARTS

PLATINUM PLAYTIME

One fateful day in 1956, Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, Johnny Cash and Carl Perkins met in a Memphis studio and recorded an off-the-cuff jam session that wasn't released until decades later. This chance encounter gathered four performers who would become some of the biggest music stars of early rock and produced a legendary recording. A dramatization of that afternoon, Million Dollar Quartet opened on Broadway in 2010 and has been touring the U.S. since 2011. Set in the fabled Sun Studios, it's an homage to an era. Tap your feet to these old beats Oct. 8-20 at the Citi Performing Arts Center. Jemma Douglas

WITCHFUL THINKING Get ready for some movie magic with Hocus Pocus back on the big screen, starring Bette Midler, Sarah Jessica Parker and Kathy Najimy as the three potion-brewing Sanderson witches. In the Disney fantasy directed by Kenny Ortega, the sisters from Salem fight off death while battling their toughest enemies yet: three kids who accidently resurrected the 17th-century wicked witches 300 years later on Halloween. Combining slapstick comedy, suspenseful horror and award-winning costumes, this film stirs up trouble Oct. 11-12 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Hannah Weintraub

2 GUNS ★★★½ Probably the most purely enjoyable of this summer's popcorn pictures, this hilarious south-of-the-border caper is a showcase for star wattage, with Denzel Washington as an undercover DEA agent working with Mark Wahlberg's naval intelligence officer to take down a Mexican drug cartel run by the always awesome Edward James Olmos. The only catch is that neither knows the other's secret, at least not before they accidentally rip off $42 million in cash from a secret CIA black-ops slush fund. Double crosses and betrayals abound, with a sadistic government assassin (Bill Paxton) leaving a pile of bodies behind him on their trail. Packed with loving references to the scummy '70s cinema of Sam Peckinpah and Don Siegel, 2 Guns capitalizes on chemistry. Denzel's unflappable, smooth-talking jive makes a marvelous match for Wahlberg's bull-in-a-china-shop belligerence. Director Baltasar Kormakur has an expert eye for action sequences, but the real pleasure of 2 Guns is just watching the two leads blabbering at each other. (In the suburbs.)

20 FEET FROM STARDOM ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

A.C.O.D. ★½ One of those weird, no-budget comedies full of the director's famous friends, this peculiar, sodden misfire stars Parks and Recreation's Adam Scott as a fussy, neurotic 30-something attempting to keep his spiteful parents (Richard Jenkins and Catherine O'Hara) apart while planning the wedding of his younger brother. Amy Poehler stomps through scenes as a trophy wife looking for something to play with, while Scott fumbles with commitment, discovering far too late for plausibility's sake that his awful childhood became a best-seller written by his therapist (Jane Lynch). Yes, it's another movie where Jane Lynch plays a therapist. In this low-aiming Sundance film, we're supposed to cheer on Scott because he can't quite make himself settle down with Mary Elizabeth Winstead and secretly wants to cheat with Jessica Alba. Director Stu Zicherman pads out the ending with testimonials from adult children of divorce (hence the title) blabbing about their child hoods, as if that would lend this nonsense credibility. Adam Scott is very funny on television, but can't carry a movie. (At Kendall Square.)

AFTERNOON DELIGHT ★½ Mistaking smug self-awareness for satire, Six Feet Under scribe Jill Soloway's rancid debut feature attempts to skewer yuppie privilege while accidentally wallowing in it. TV's secret weapon Kathryn Hahn gets a rare leading film role as Rachel, a bored housewife living in L.A.'s pseudo-bohemian Silver Lake neighborhood, a moneyed oasis of overachievers and soy pizzas from Whole Foods. An ill-considered attempt to make her husband (Josh Radnor, blandness personified) look up from his iPhone lands the couple in a strip club, where Rachel meets 19-year-old McKenna, played by the great Juno Temple, who improbably winds up moving in with the couple and working as a nanny when she's not turning tricks downtown. Depressingly, the movie treats McKenna worse than any of her clients ever did. The disposable prostitute exists to perform a function—repairing the marriage of two wealthy and uninteresting people. After helping Rachel get her groove back, she's humiliated and appallingly discarded without a second thought on the way to what Soloway appears to consider a happy ending. (At Kendall Square.)

BLUE JASMINE ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature has become a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy, in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweet heart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

DON JON ★ Joseph Gordon-Levitt brings to his performances a sly, understated intelligence that often allows him to abscond with scenes out from under the noses of his more openly demonstrative co-stars. Which is all a roundabout way of saying it's a terrible idea to cast this guy as The Situation. Written and directed by the enterprising young actor, Don Jon is a barn-door-broad burlesque of Joisey stereotypes and holy-cannoli accents. Snapping gum and pulling faces as the title character, Gordon-Levitt stars as a neat-freak, fitness-obsessed lothario. This handsome bartender has an aversion to wearing shirts with sleeves; he's a dimwitted chick magnet, hooked on Internet porn. A compulsive masturbator with a penchant for flattened vowels, Jon scores most nights of the week, and then secretly retires to his living room and finishes himself off in front of the computer with a handful of Kleenex. Like most current indies, Don Jon is curiously devoid of subplots and struggles to barely crawl across the 90-minute mark. It's a silly vanity project from a young talent who should know better. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Drinking Buddies ★ On the surface, this looks like maddeningly prolific DIY auteur Joe Swanberg's most accessible film to date, one made with real movie stars, actual money and a Hollywood hook. Olivia Wilde, Jake Johnson, Anna Kendrick and Ron Livingston star as a pair of mismatched couples, best friends secretly harboring feelings for one another as they drink too much while working at a Chicago craft brewery. Then you sit down to watch it, and it turns out to be the same old Swanberg amateur hour. Improvised from an outline instead of a script, it's an indifferently photographed chronicle of passive-aggressive behavior by people who have nothing particularly interesting to say. Drinking Buddies is the kind of movie you forget while you're still watching it. According to Swanberg partisans, his technique strips away the artifice and cuts to human truth. I would argue that if you strip away things like camera placement, scene construction and dialogue writing, you've just stripped away everything that is cinema, leaving you with a glorified home video. (At Kendall Square and On Demand.)

Elysium ★ 1/2 Sneaking in under the wire to wrestle the award for this summer's most stupidly illogical screenplay away from Star Trek Into Darkness, director Neill Blomkamp's follow-up to 2009's nifty (if wildly overpraised) District 9 is a health care/immigration allegory that makes less sense the more you think about it. It's 2154 and the one-percenters have moved on up to a deluxe space station in the sky, leaving polluted, overpopulated Earth in the condition of a Rio de Janeiro favela. Matt Damon stars as an ex-con factory worker with a nasty case of radiation poisoning, attempting to crash the orbiting gated community for access to high-tech tanning beds that cure every illness. Jodie Foster is just awful as the hard-nosed homeland-security honcho barking orders to kill all the poor people with an accent from Planet Brando. Devoid of nuance, characterization or coherence, Elysium staggers from one arbitrary, unmotivated action sequence to another, and even Damon—normally the most reliable actor in movies—seems to lose interest about halfway through. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Family ★★ Robert De Niro has been lazily phoning it in for the past 15 years, so it's a bit of a shock to see him awake, alert and delivering a genuinely endearing turn in director Luc Besson's otherwise muddled comedy. The raging bull stars as a not-so-reformed wise guy relocated for the umpteenth time, this year to a sleepy French village, thanks to the witness protection program. But he and his family (wife Michelle Pfeiffer, plus kids Dianna Agron and John D'Leo) are unrepentant horrors, busting heads and blowing stuff up at the slightest sign of disrespect, which as you might expect happens quite often to ugly Americans in rural France. Besson can't reconcile his farcical construct with the regular bursts of graphic violence; it just feels confused. The film's meager pleasures are in the performances, with Pfeiffer busting out her old Married to the Mob routine and the twinkly-eyed De Niro needling gruff FBI handler Tommy Lee Jones. It's a weird movie even before De Niro ends up watching GoodFellas. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Getaway ★ A 90-minute car chase in which you can't see anything that's happening, director Courtney Solomon's Getaway is an affront to the art of film editing. It's a mishmash of shots strewn together seemingly at random, discarding any sense of cinematic grammar and barely holding on an image for more than two or three seconds. Ethan Hawke stars as Brent Magna (great name!), a retired race car driver who comes home one Christmas night to find his wife has been kidnapped; a man with a silly accent is on the phone telling him to steal a souped-up Shelby Mustang Silver Snake and drive it through the city crashing into stuff, otherwise she's dead. For reasons too stupid to explain, Selena Gomez ends up riding shotgun. While they evade and destroy dozens upon dozens of police cars she pouts, complains and basically is required to narrate the action sequences because otherwise we wouldn't have any idea what the hell is going on. Come back, Dom Toretto! (In the suburbs.)

The Grandmaster ★★★ Drastically re-edited for American release, complete with expository English-language title cards and a laughable promotional campaign with music by the Wu-Tang Clan, the great director Wong Kar-Wai's latest finally arrives on these shores as an awkward patchwork quilt. The true-life tale of Chinese martial-arts legend Ip Man (Tony Leung) spans decades and wars in a traditional biopic format, but there's a much dreamier, sadder Wong Kar-Wai movie clearly struggling to get out. As evidenced by masterpieces like In the Mood for Love and 2046, he's foremost a poet of heartbreak. So while these fight scenes are indeed intricately and gorgeously rendered, emphasizing precision over violence, there are also an awful lot of them. After much lurching about, The Grandmaster finally finds its soul in the second hour, settling into the unrequited love story between Leung and fellow exile Ziyi Zhang. Suddenly, we're back to Wong's period Hong Kong of lush surfaces, incandescent colors and feelings too fragile to be expressed. (In the suburbs.)

Gravity ★★★ Alfonso Cuarón's first film since 2006's Children of Men is a technical astonishment, and it's easy to see why it's been five years in the making. Gravity is first and foremost a wonder to watch, demanding to be seen on the largest screen possible. As a technological milestone, Gravity is astounding. As a movie, it's pretty OK. Sandra Bullock and George Clooney star as astronauts stranded in space after a terrifying hailstorm of Russian satellite debris makes a mess of their mission. Gravity is for all intents and purposes a computer-animated movie, with actual photography of the actors' heads stuck in the middle of the most photo-realistic CGI I have ever seen. But then about halfway through, Gravity decides it needs to be "about" something. Yet the thunderous banality of this screenplay cannot detract from the accomplishment of Cuarón's filmmaking. I've honestly never seen anything like it, the rootless camera so indifferent to the characters, inviting us to just dwell for a bit in the vast, airless emptiness of space. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★ 1/2 A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Parkland ★ 1/2 Rosencrantz and Guildenstern go to an assassination in writer-director Peter Landesman's Parkland, a noble-in-theory effort to take yet another look at JFK's murder through the eyes of all those regular folks at Dealey Plaza on that sad day in November. Much like Emilio Estevez's risible 2006 directorial effort Bobby, this is a movie where neither the president nor his assassin play a role. We're just watching people with 9-to-5 jobs carried away by the tide of history. Most of this falls on a cocky ER doc, played by Zac Efron. He's not interesting, but he did have the misfortune of working long shifts that week and thus tried to resuscitate both President Kennedy and Lee Harvey Oswald. He's otherwise got nothing to say, and was really just in the wrong place at the wrong time. Landsman's camera moves along herking and jerking all over the place, grinding gears on banal procedural details until it all feels like an episode of Law & Order: Dealey Plaza. (On Demand.)

Riddick ★★ 1/2 The Chronicles of Riddick, writer-director David Twohy's epically craptacular 2004 follow-up to his nifty little 2000 B-picture Pitch Black, bombed. But Vin Diesel wouldn't let it go. I can't really blame him because it's easy to see why he loves playing Riddick. A healthy percentage of screen time in every Riddick movie is devoted to supporting characters standing around talking about how awesome Riddick is, and how terrified they are of Riddick. Then Riddick eventually makes a grand entrance and doesn't expend much effort killing people in various clever and amusing ways. No wonder he kicked in his own cash to get this passable third picture made! Note the absence of "Chronicles" in the title this time. It's a leaner, more entertaining piece of work. Gory as hell, Riddick is an Aliens-styled barrage of creepy crawlies and shifting alliances presided over by Diesel, clearly having the time of his life. I sheepishly admit that over the years, I've grown inexplicably fond of Diesel's fashion model poses and doofus line readings. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rush ★★★ The great thing about Ron Howard movies is that nobody's ever going to be in any danger of missing the point. But Rush is one of his good ones. This propulsive piece of mythmaking follows the famous 1976 rivalry between Formula One racers Niki Lauda (Daniel Brühl) and James Hunt (Chris Hemsworth). Speeding around the track during appalling weather conditions in what basically amounts to a rickety go-kart strapped with tanks of rocket fuel, these hot shots boast about the fact that at least two of them die every year. For all intents and purposes, a philosophical argument takes place at 140 mph. Rush pits Brühl's no-nonsense, disciplined Lauda against Hemsworth's swaggering, womanizing Hunt during a championship season full of so many surprises you'd think the writer was a hack if this all hadn't actually happened. Screenwriter Peter Morgan sets the stage for a high-octane riff on Amadeus. Shot by the groundbreaking digital videographer Anthony Dod Mantle and cut into concussive mini-scenes by editor Daniel P. Hanley, this sucker moves. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Spectacular Now ★★½ Hard-partying Sutter (Miles Teller) has never taken anything seriously, least of all himself. But on the verge of graduating high school he finds himself unexpectedly smitten with good girl Aimee (Shailene Woodley), a delicate wallflower who lives in a world beyond his circle of never-ending keggers. She tutors him in geometry; he teaches her how to drink. But do they have a future when Sutter only lives in the now? Based on the young adult novel by Tim Tharp, The Spectacular Now is gentle, exceedingly well-acted and directed with tact and restraint by James Ponsoldt. Some folks are alrcady calling it a coming-of-age classic. But I couldn't get past the clod-dish screenplay by (500) Days of Summer writers Scott Neustadter and Michael H. Weber, which reiterates and underlines the themes in bright red, then spells them out again just in case anybody missed anything. Take a drink every time these characters deliver monologues about "living in thc now," and you'll be in worse shape than the alcoholics onscreen. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Wolverine ★★½ Few films fall apart as spectacularly in their third act as this sccond attempt to give Hugh Jackman's knuckle-knived berserker a stand-alonc franchise apart from his mutant X-Men pals. This time around he's on the run through the Far East, protecting an heiress (Tao Okamoto) marked for death by the Yakuza, various ninjas and a few rotten relatives. What makes The Wolverine so refreshing for so long is its smallness of scale. There's no apocalyptic CGI grandeur, just a lot of close-quartered fights full of sharp, pointy objects. Journeyman director James Mangold hews to clean compositions, clearly defined action geography and striking use of the Japanese locations. It's tightly focused, even intimate by comic book standards. Until all of a sudden, it isn't anymore. The film's final segment retreats to a generic industrial space for a cacophony of preposterous plot twists and weightless computer-generated destruction, complete with the now obligatory midcredits teaser for the next installment. Such a shame, as this was almost a real movie. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The World's End ★★ Critics aren't supposed to admit such things, but we all have aesthetic blind spots. It's part of the human condition. Not everything works for everybody, particularly when it comes to comedy. Director Edgar Wright and his frequent collaborators Simon Pegg and Nick Frost are revered as gods in many circles, telling tales of stunted, funny men dragged kicking and screaming toward adulthood thanks to the outside interference of popular genre-film conventions. 2004's Shaun of the Dead was a promising dcbut, with two slackers on thc margins of a zombie apocalypse. Less so was 2007's Hot Fuzz, a goof on buddy-cop cliches, and now The World's End did nothing for me at all. Pcgg stars as a blcary drunkard dragging his middle-aged friends to re-enact a pub crawl from their teens, only to discover their homctown has bcen taken over by alien robots. I guess I'm just tired of the routine, respecting Wright's carefully rhyming compositions and frenetic editing without enjoying them very much at all. Your personal mileage may vary. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SISTER ACT CocoRosie's hypnotic sound is often labeled "freak folk," but the duo draws on a panoply of genres—opera, pop, blues, electronica, hip-hop—and acoustic and synthesized instruments, from piano and harp to beatboxing samples and children's toys. The sisters' childhood was just as far-ranging: Bianca "Coco" and Sierra "Rosie" Casady grew up constantly on the move, hopping from town to town in Hawaii, California, New Mexico and Arizona and picking up artistic influences along the way. After a few years out of touch, they reconnected a decade ago in Paris and started recording music in their bathroom. Now they're back to their nomadic roots, staging frequent tours all over the world. Get freaky with CocoRosie on Oct. 13 at the Paradise Rock Club. Hannah Brown PHOTO: RODRIGO JARDON

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

GROOVY GARB Time travel may not be possible yet, but the Museum of Fine Arts comes close with Hippie Chic. The exhibit features 54 looks dating from 1967 through 1972, with styles ranging from psychedelic to retro, materials like crushed velvet and techniques like patchwork and tie dye. Although hippies rejected high fashion by creating their own clothing, Hippie Chic shows how their DIY movement ended up inspiring haute couture designers such as Halston and Yves Saint Laurent. Step out of the DeLorean time machine at the MFA through Nov. 11. / Coryn Doncaster

COMEBACK KID

Gymnast Joe Putignano is capable of jaw-dropping feats of contortion, but the way he turned his life around may be even more impressive. A one-time Olympic hopeful, he descended into a harrowing heroin addiction, which he recounts in his memoir, Acrobaddict. After shooting up on the job, becoming homeless and getting declared clinically dead—twice—he was ultimately able to achieve sobriety and appear in The Times They Are A-Changin' on Broadway and Cirque du Soleil's Totem. Start a new chapter with Putignano on Oct. 16 at Porter Square Books. Maria Scenna

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

BROWNSTONE offers America style comfort foods with a twist

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. WHAT'S HE GONNA DO WITH A GOLD WATCH?

Imagine having to stand outside and not be able to attend your own retirement party because it would be a health code violation.

That was the ignominious sitch when Jacob, a horse that has patrolled the city's green spaces as part of the Boston Park Rangers Mounted Unit for years, was feted before he gets put out to pasture. The fundraiser for Save Boston Horses took place on the rooftop at the Taj, with its jaw-dropping views of the city, while Jacob majestically stood sentry at the street entrance.

Among the attendees: über do-gooders Maggie and Kevin Ahearn, breath of fresh air Pam Lazares, blond bombshell Connie Brown, whirling dervish Joshua Janson and his long suffering husband, Ben McGuire, demi-semi-retiree Richard DeAgazio, blue-blooded sportsman George Lewis V, ballet historian Tina Sutton (whose new book about Alicia Markova just got a shout-out in Vogue), Boston's fairy godfather, Harry Collings, the unsinkable Molly Dunne, pompadoured playboy Brett Casiraghi, the impeccably dressed Bob Raimondo, brunette lovebug Amy Finsilver, BFF Joan Jolley, and one person who said, "I'm busier than I've ever been. I don't know how I ever had a full-time job."

The award for most glib remark goes to the person who saw the live auction item of naming rights to Jacob's successor and said, "I'd go with the most tasteless thing imaginable: Elmer... as in glue."

"Is her husband still in jail?" to which the other person responded, "Yes. I think he'd rather stay there than go back to living with her."

BRINGING IN THE SHEAVES

As the saying goes: "You reap what you sow," which means that the Friends of Boston's Homeless have a surplus of good karma for hosting their annual farm-to-table Harvest Dinner at Camp Harbor View (which certainly lives up to its name).

Guests gathered for cocktails and canapés by the chicken coop at the organic farm that's run as part of the Long Island Shelter. Then it was on to the dining hall for a dinner by celebrity chefs Joanne Chang, Chris Douglass, Jim Solomon and Dave Becker and participants in the Serving Ourselves culinary program, while the sun went down, a full moon rose and the Boston waterfront slowly started to twinkle on the horizon.

Chowing down on all the deliciousness were activist extraordinaire John Rosenthal and the flawless Maureen, gangsta outlaw Doris Yaffe, real estate babe Less Arnold, radiant radio personality Rita Cary and her handsome husband, Peter, farm manager Catalina Lopez Ospina, the luscious Alisa De Gaspe Beaubien and her handsome hubby, Charles, Chestnut Hillions Bernie and Barbara Lebow, and one woman who said about the ride out to the farm, "Why does Quincy smell so bad?"

However, the evening's best exchange was: "Is her husband still in jail?" to which the other person responded, "Yes. I think he'd rather stay there than go back to living with her."

THERE'S ALWAYS DEPENDS

A discerning 5-year-old's review of The Huntington Theatre Company's Opening Night presentation of The Jungle Book: "I want to see it again tonight. Or tomorrow. Or right now. And I want to be Mowgli. And I want a play-date with him."

In other words, it looks like the Disney-as-theater juggernaut has another hit on its hands. On hand for the star-studded debut: theater chatelaine Joyce Kulhawik, arts patron Joanne Dickinson, the lovely Carol Deane, party pair Linda and Dan Waintrup, the comme il faut Anne Fitzpatrick Cucchiaro and her other half, Steve, the ever dapper Donald Nelson with his hunk-a-hunk-a burnin' love, Neal Balkowitsch, Beacon Hillion Dola Stemberg, a good portion of the Spooner clan—including John, Nick and Amanda—the perfectly charming Betsy and David Epstein with their in-laws, Esta and Bob, über-philanthropists Douglas and Judi Krupp, and so on and so forth.

Not that the all-ages crowd could by any means be described as geriatric, but one man by the bar quipped: "I'm going to live dangerously and have a glass of sparkling water. At my age, when you do that, you have to pee five minutes into the first act." ◆

A MORE PERFECT UNION

LAST WEEK, I ATTENDED A LAVISH wedding in San Diego. It was a night of emotion, with strong, outdoorsy men weeping into their speeches, and charm, like when a photo montage showed the groom in an "I ♥ Farts" T-shirt. It was also more fun than a barrel of monkeys with drinking habits and good credit. There were 14 bridesmaids, choreographed buffet times and a vintage roadster delivering the bride to the altar. If the reception lacked the scale of, say, a serious invasion of Russia, it at least clocked in as a minor land war.

More than 2 million weddings take place in the U.S. each year, all of which are photographed next to the willow trees in the Public Garden. That receptions have reached a Halliburton level of production goes without saying; to survive, a wedding planner needs the temperament of limestone. So I felt a small burst of pride when my fiancee and I managed to startle Philip, our coordinator at the Four Seasons. We told him we'd be ordering a traditional Lithuanian cake for our reception next year.

"It's called a raguolis, a horned cake," said my fiancee. "It's made with over 100 eggs. They throw the batter at a rotating spit."

"It kind of looks like a big tree trunk," I added. Well, obviously. Philip raised an eyebrow and admitted that he'd never heard this request before.

It's human nature to strive for individuality, but the statistics are against us. My fiancee and I were lucky to be born into an unfashionable ethnicity, which helps, but there's always room to stretch. In this issue, Lydia Santangelo stages a rural Italian wedding, Nicole Popma finds new ideas for centerpieces and I personalize my vows. So now all that's been done, too.

Pollen Floral Design
bostonpollen.com

Flower crowns aren't just for Coachella festivalgoers or fairy princesses—these blooming headpieces are now popping up more and more at the altar. In February, Krissy Price opened Pollen Floral Design in Boston, where she creates customized crowns, and other wedding floral arrangements, for blushing brides. "I almost always make one for myself [too]," Price says. "So I'm flouncing around the apartment in flower crowns quite often." Here's Price's step-by-step guide to constructing your own majestic bouquet. / Jemma Douglas

1. Using floral wire, make a circle in the shape of your head and then twist the ends, clip the wire and tuck in the remaining ends.
2. Make a small bouquet and attach it to the wire using floral tape. Wrap each cluster a couple of times to ensure that it's stable, and keep the tape running.
3. Continue adding small clusters of flowers, overlapping them, until you cover all the floral wire. If you only want a half crown, you can spray paint or wrap ribbon around the rest of the exposed wire.
4. Finish with a finishing spray (Crowning Glory is the brand Krissy prefers, no pun intended), and add a trailing ribbon if you'd like.

PLAYS WITH YOUR FOOD

DRAMATIC READINGS AT ERBALUCE

IT'S A FAR CRY from dinner theater, and that's just the way Charles Draghi likes it. The chef-owner of Erbaluce (and part-time playwright) recently relaunched a monthly series of play readings "to satisfy the other half of my soul, the playwright side." And he's attracting both award-winning talent and appreciative audiences.

Irish-born Ronan Noone kicked off the second-Sunday-of-the-month series with a new play followed by a discussion with listeners, who often stay for dinner. Not long ago, Draghi invited a group of Irish actors from Belfast to celebrate the legacy of Seamus Heaney with a reading of the late poet's verse and "maybe a couple of dirty limericks." Not every featured writer is Irish, but, Draghi says, "The Irish write a lot, and they're really good at it." A future reading will spotlight Cuban-American playwright Melinda Lopez.

"It's very bohemian," Draghi says. "Nobody's getting paid; I'm just feeding them." "Them" refers to the writers; attendees get complimentary light nibbles and priceless insight into the mechanics of creating a drama. It's a process Draghi knows well: His works have been accepted by the Boston Playwrights' Theatre's Boston Theater Marathon.

Because Erbaluce sits near the Theater District, it draws both performers and theatergoers who appreciate Draghi's commitment to featuring lighter-than-customary Italian food, prepared without heavy sauces laden with butter, cream and oil. "People don't feel bloated and uncomfortable in their seats" after dinner at Erbaluce, says Draghi, who offers proof: After the performance, many return to the restaurant for dessert.

TURKISH DELIGHTS

ANA SORTUN GETS COOKING

THE REPUTATION OF OLEANA CHEF/owner Ana Sortun would have been enough to draw customers to Sarma, her new restaurant in Somerville, but she had grand plans. After a couple of years of kicking around ideas for a new restaurant, Sortun and her crew took a trip to Istanbul this past spring to hone in on the concept.

"It's modeled after a meyhane (a traditional restaurant in Turkey)," Sortun says. "It's over-the-top colorful, inspired by the Grand Bazaar."

The new spot sits where the long-beloved Paddock Restaurant used to operate on Winter Hill, but the once dimly lit joint has a new feel after being gutted. Inside Sarma, the banquettes sport 16 different fabric patterns, along with a tile floor from Spain. "It's going to be bright," Sortun says.

That shine is likely to carry over to the menu of meze, which Sortun and co-owner Cassie Piuma, former chef de cuisine at Oleana, expect will change frequently. But most of the dishes will be spice-influenced and carry prices from $7 to $14. Yogurt cheese and hummus are prominent, while options like tuna nayeh or crab and red lentil kibbeh also reflect a Middle Eastern tilt.

The spices carry over to the drinks program, which is headed up by Vikram Hegde, formerly of Island Creek Oyster Bar. The bar is a focal point in the center of the space, and Hegde is aiming for it to live up to its conspicuous position with a menu of food-focused, aperitif-driven cocktails such as the Hippodrome, made with La Favorite Rhum, mastic, sage and lime. Decorating the bar are souvenirs from the staff's Istanbul excursion, including copper trays and a hotel room key.

Somerville is nearly 5,000 miles from Istanbul, but Sortun is confident this modern interpretation of a meyhane will fit well in the middle of the burgeoning Somerville restaurant scene.

"We like being in neighborhoods and we prefer being a part of the growth," Sortun says. "It makes it more casual."

Q&A

Whose Line Is It Anyway? funnyman Colin Mochrie performs improv with fellow cast member Brad Sherwood at the Wilbur Theatre on Nov. 2.

WHAT DRAWS YOU TO IMPROV INSTEAD OF STAND-UP? With stand-up, there's a lot more work. You have to write your material, and then there's more of a struggle between the audience and the stand-up. The audience is there, going, "OK, you wrote this, you said it's funny, so prove it." Whereas with improv, we're getting all our information and ideas from the audience, so they sort of have a vested interest in it going well. I love just being able to take what they give us and then, with a partner, somehow make a scene out of it. I mean, with stand-up you're by yourself. So you know if things go bad you're alone. At least in improv when you die, you're taking your friends with you.

DOES IT FEEL LIKE YOU'VE NEVER LEFT WHOSE LINE? Yeah, it really does. When we started taping up again, Ryan [Stiles] said, "We just had a long lunch break." It's in the same place we filmed, a lot of the same crew, a lot of the same staff, so it really is like coming home again. And pretty much the minute we started improvising together, it was like, "Oh yeah, this is fun."

HOW DIFFICULT IS THE NEW SIDEWAYS SCENE? I don't know how it looks to the audience, but it is incredibly difficult. I actually bled in one of the shows because I got floor burn. It's hard to sort of locomote yourself across the floor, on your side, and make it look natural, which of course it never will. But it's kind of cool being able to do backflips and things and make it look like you're actually doing it. When we do the flips, it's hard to sort of keep your eye on what the other guys are doing, so there have been some elbows, knees and feet that have gone places you don't want them to go.

IS NOT CARING ABOUT PERSONAL SPACE A REQUIREMENT FOR BEING ON THE SHOW? Yes, it really is. That and no sense of shame. Those are the two things that get you through improv. It's very sad what we do just to get a laugh. / Hannah Sheinberg

SISTER SISTER

Just because you share the same DNA doesn't mean you share the same taste in fashion. Sisters Jaimie and Jess Sparks have their own distinct styles—Jaimie favoring feminine silhouettes, Jess a casual rocker vibe—each of which features in their recently opened South Boston store, Pretty Reckless. But both have strong business backgrounds: Jaimie studied at L.A.'s Fashion Institute of Design & Merchandising and worked at Winchester boutique Sells & Co, while Jess works in marketing at the Edrington Group. They've always felt a project like this was in store. "[It's] a dream we always knew someday we would make happen and that we would do it together. Who can you trust more than your own sister?" Jaimie says. Stocked with everything from sweatshirts and jeans to dresses and rompers, the store also has local exclusives on accessories like Madly-yours' hand painted clutches. Pictured above is a sampling of the pretty and reckless finds on their racks, selected by each sister. / Sarah Hagman

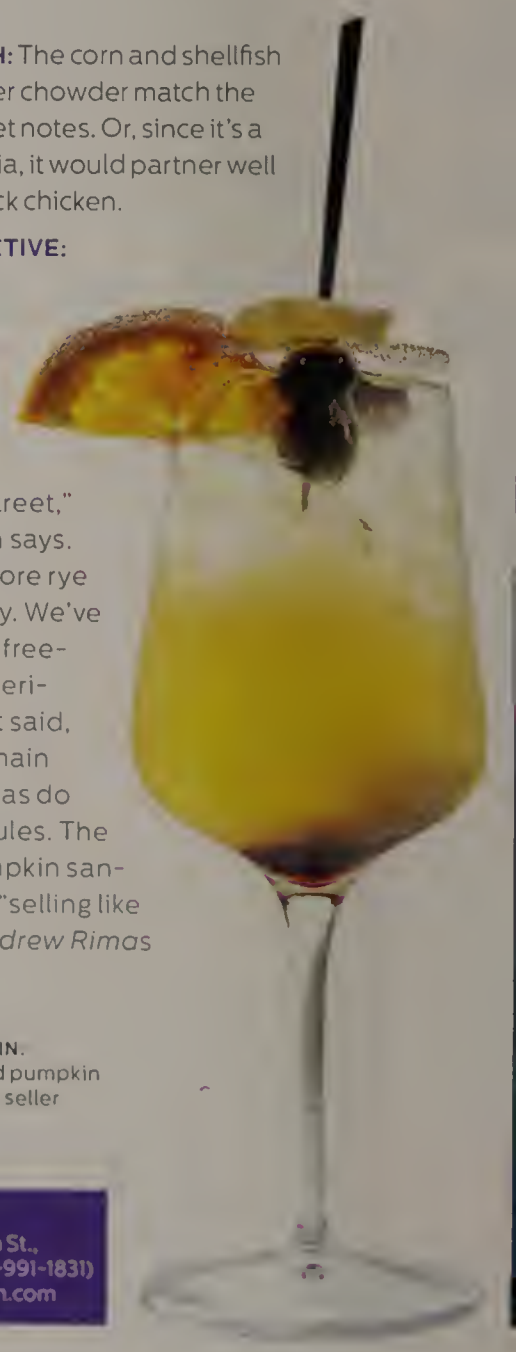
Drink of the Moment
SPICED PUMPKIN SANGRIA

PRICE: $13

INVENTOR: Forum bartender Maeghan Kleinerman

INGREDIENTS: Columbia Winery Riesling, Tuaca Liqueur, Stirrings Ginger Liqueur, Crop Organic Spiced Pumpkin Vodka, fresh orange juice, ginger ale



CONCEPT: "I call it a sangria, but it's more of a punch," says Kleinerman, whose first attempt at the drink lacked sweetness. "I didn't want to do a tart sauvignon blanc or pinot grigio. Sometimes wine can be really dry, and this one's not." When Kleinerman added the orange juice, it turned the drink a light shade of pumpkin, while the Tuaca "mellows everything out."

TASTE: Smooth as pumpkin bisque, and markedly sweeter. The Riesling's floral nose is sharpened with vanilla and citrus from the Tuaca. A snap of ginger opens into the earthier notes of the vodka. "It's got real pumpkin flavor," Kleinerman says. "A great baking-spice flavor. I'm sick of pumpkin beer and that taste of cinnamon sugar." The finish is balanced, not cloying. "The pumpkin's the star."

PARADOX: It's a light cocktail, served iced, but the autumn spices make it feel as warming as mulled wine.

PAIR IT WITH: The corn and shellfish in the lobster chowder match the drink's sweet notes. Or, since it's a white sangria, it would partner well with the brick chicken.

IN PERSPECTIVE: "When the restaurant opened, the drink menu was very Boylston Street," Kleinerman says. "Now it's more rye and whiskey. We've had a lot of freedom to experiment." That said, cosmos remain a big seller, as do Moscow mules. The spiced pumpkin sangria, too, is "selling like crack." / Andrew Rimas

Something New

Saying yes to the dress isn't always easy. After two trips to New York to find her own wedding dress, Alix Childs decided it was time for Boston brides to have a pain-free search. Now she's gearing up to open her own bridal boutique, Ceremony, in November. With a laid-back ambiance similar to a friend's apartment—a friend's very white and airy apartment—the Beacon Hill shop features a handpicked selection of designers not sold elsewhere in Boston, including Elizabeth Fillmore, known for beautiful draping and barely-there backs, and Claire Pettibone, whose boho creations have found a cult following, along with vintage gowns and accessories. "My goal is to make the whole bridal experience more about personal style and fashion," says Childs, who has spent her career in marketing and creative services at J.Crew and Madewell (and who flexes her styling skills as an Improper contributor). The boutique will also offer online photo albums from fittings, vendor referrals, groom styling, and hair and makeup tutorials, so all you have left to do is walk down the aisle. / Hannah Weintraub

You've got the date, venue and guest list nailed down. Now you just need to get it all on paper, which is where Lindsey Timko and Chelsea Hachey come in. The graphic-design duo, college friends based in Brookline and Annapolis, Md., respectively, recently launched Seaside Paperie, a custom stationery business that grew out of their mutual affection for fine paper, wedding design and nautical style. The collaborative process starts with a private Pinterest board for bookmarking ideas for save-the-dates, invitations, maps, menus—even door hangers. Barbera Necessities

The Langhe is a formation of fog-blanketed hills in Italy's Southern Piedmont that was a seabed eons ago; its chalky clay soils have been cultivated with vines since the second century B.C. On the right bank of the region's Tanaro river, vines are planted in mineral-rich grayish-white calcareous marls interspersed with patches of sandstone, limestone and yellow sand. This is the home of the barbera grape, one of the world's most venerable, but also underappreciated, red varieties. Slow to ripen and rich in tart cherry flavor, barbera represents one of the finest values in all of Italy. The following three are bold-flavored, hearty favorites.

ASCHERI "FONTANELLE," BARBERA D'ALBA, 2011
Ascheri produces a savory barbera with more of a real edge to its flavors. Fresh, bright and cherry-like, with vibrant, tart berry fruit, this vigorous wine lingers on the palate. Mellow but earthy and powerful, it provides an ideal match for pasta Bolognese or a plate of cured meats.

...

MICHELE CHIARLO "LE ORME," BARBERA D'ASTI SUPERIORE, 2010
This wine shows the lively, raspberry-scented, fruit-forward potential of the grape. It is supple and smooth, with an almost creamy texture. A medium-bodied style that has mouthwatering juicy acidity, it is very versatile with food, complementing grilled fish steaks as well as roasted chicken rubbed with herbs.

BRUNO GIACOSA, BARBERA D'ALBA, 2011
Located near the town of Alba, Giacosa's vineyards yield a traditionally styled barbera with floral perfume, a leathery, dried red-fruit character and hints of licorice and pepper. Definitely a bottle that should be decanted for aeration, this dense, rustic wine is ideal for autumnal dishes like lamb stew or mushroom ravioli. The great Barbaresco producer's barbera will also age for at least five years.

COLD FUSION: Cutting-edge ice cream in Cambridge

Good Eats: Scientific Method

The gray-white swirls wafting from the storage container in Harvard's Science Center Plaza aren't smoke. They're from the liquid nitrogen that Ash Chan uses to make ice cream at his new pop-up, Churn2. The cryogenic freezing process isn't just visual theatrics: It lowers the temperature of the base so rapidly that larger ice crystals—the kind that can make traditional ice cream feel grainy—don't form, resulting in a product that's stunningly smooth and dense. Even better, each serving is churned to order, so flavors like Cookies 'n' Cream and Pumpkin Pie taste clean and fresh. / Elizabeth Bomze

DRESSED TO THRILL

OUR SOCIAL COLUMNIST'S FIRST NOVEL

Crimes of Fashion* by Jonathan Soroff Published by CreateSpace, 298 pages, $13.99 paperback

The author is an Improper columnist.

BEGINNING WITH THE FUNNY ANTI-BLURBS on the back cover ("I haven't read Crimes of Fashion and I probably never will. Soroff owes me dinner for providing this quote." — Ben Mezrich), the wit keeps rolling. This novel follows Desiree, a rich bitchissima, her nicer rich Italian friend, Alta, and Desiree's undocumented Latina maid, Ita, who becomes a successful fashion designer. But Ita's important role in the company formed by these women is suppressed due to her legal status and her miserable majesty Desiree's vicious dismissal of her.

The sparkly jewels of Soroff's portrayal are a treat; how we long for Desiree's demise! She's achin' for a breakin' even as she appears to triumph professionally, and throughout her hot, druggy affair with her hairdresser—named Cad—his gay-escort life is lost on her, even as they exploit each other. The plot flows merrily along, full of mischievous, sly descriptions.

But there are also decent characters, like Desiree's hapless hubby, Sol, and his daughter, Coco, who balance out the baddies. Sexy encounters abound, some marked by amusing misunderstandings, and all's well that ends with justice done, and the bad in rehab and in ruin.

'Well, Mr. Immigration, would you and Mr. Naturalization like to come in?'

The sarcasm was lost on the wholly humorless I.N.S. agent, who turned to his partner and said, 'This must be her. Hear the accent?'

'Right,' said the shorter one. 'You're Ita Sinpesos?' He pronounced her name with deliberate clumsiness, as if its 'foreigness' left a bitter aftertaste." ◆

FAR FROM THE CROWD

THE BAHAMIAN RESORT THAT GIVES PARADISE ISLAND ITS NAME

THERE ARE TIMES WHEN YOU QUESTION the sum of your life choices. When reality comes into searing, crisp perspective, and your mind ventures down the path not taken. One of those times occurs on the beach at the One&Only Ocean Club, Bahamas, if you rest your eyes on the turquoise horizon and let your muscles yield to the wash of the sun. It's good you're already lying down in a beach chair, because your knees might buckle at the notion that, if Fate had been more kindly, you could've gotten here sooner.

After landing in Nassau, a town car shuttles you from the airport down an expressway that makes I-93 feel like a mogul slope. This delivers you to a whitewashed colonial mansion where you're offered lemonade and check-in documents. In the scope of paradisiacal resorts, the One&Only errs toward the serene. Its villas nestle in a strip of tropical fronds wound by walking paths and statuary; the peace is unruffled by anything more blaring than a murmur of surf. Most of the rooms are oriented toward the perfect blue sea; it fills the sightlines from the private balconies, or from your bed if you leave the louvered doors open to the island air. Decor is hardwood with dabs of orchids and simple art, except in the bathrooms, which are regal: deep soaking tubs, mosaics and long swathes of marble. It's tempting to linger indoors, but the resort offers plenty of distractions.

These begin at the private beach. A staircase leads down a bluff to sand as tightly manicured as the clockwork lawn. Concierges will position your chair and bring you liquids (the local beer is charmless, but the bar's cocktail program does wonders for the reputation of umbrella drinks). They'll even clean your sunglasses. Your vacation could begin and end with floating in this warm surf or feeling the velvet sand under your feet, and it would be worth the trip. Stroll up the strand, noting the absence of any other sunbath-ers save gulls. Also, no rocks. Even the most determined masochist couldn't scratch his instep on this coastline.

One&Only boasts other venues for absorbing your annual dose of vitamin D. The 12-foot-deep Versailles Pool is broad, languid and aptly named, since it overlooks a vista of terraced gardens modeled on royal French design. Imported marble and bronze statues punctuate the greens, while at the crest stands an excessively romantic 12th-century French cloister—a roofless colonnade among the palms, like a ruin made for wedding photos. The grandeur is calculated. In 1962, when the property converted from a private retreat into a 52-room resort, the guests at the opening included European aristocrats, William Randolph Hearst and Zsa Zsa Gabor. The owner, a literalist named Huntington Hartford II, successfully convinced the Bahamian government to change the island's name to "Paradise."

The most surprising pleasure at One&Only, however, is the menu. Most Caribbean resorts let their kitchens coast on expensive products and obvious luxury—the filet mignon philosophy of cooking, with a conch fritter appetizer tossed in for local flavor. Here, even the bar snacks at the Pool Terrace Cafe are constructed with a mind for impressive portions and creativity (the tartar sauce on the grouper sandwich is inflected with an almost Jamaican heat, while the fries would make a Belgian proud). Don't miss dinner at Jean-Georges Vongerichten's Dune, overlooking the ocean (again with the literalism). It professes to serve "French-Asian cuisine infused with local herbs and Bahamian influences," which means that the curried local lobster comes with bok choy and fried plantains, and that every nuance, down to the spicy olive oil with your ciabatta, is a legitimate threat to your swimsuit figure.

From your table, look out over a seascape that once flitted with pirate barques, but now sees the slow creep of cruise liners. Their teeming thousands are heading for Atlantis, a few miles up the beach. Here, at One&Only, the name is literal. ◆

CIAO DOWN

NEBO
520 Atlantic Ave., Boston
neborestaurant.com

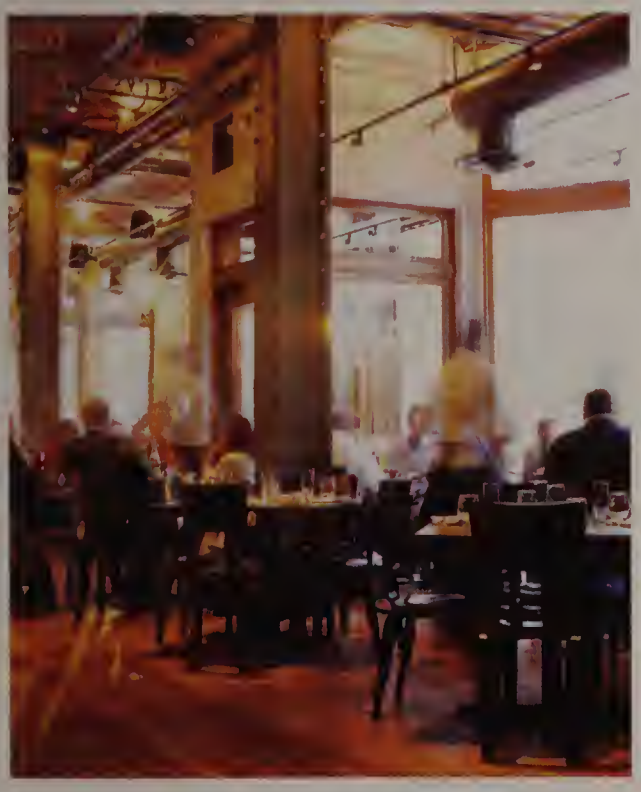
WHENEVER A LOCAL RESTAURANT closes up and moves to bigger digs, loyal diners and bored Yelpers always seem to enter a long mourning phase. "But L'Espalier was so intimate!" they sniffle. "But Craigie Street had so much charm!" On and on they lament, only grudgingly admitting months later that good food can be just as good in a different setting.

Then there's Nebo. Nary a peep about the old North End location can be heard at the restaurant's sparkling new venue on the Greenway—at least not over the joyful din of clinking glasses, boisterous conversation and plates being scraped clean. Owners Carla and Christine Pallotta opened Nebo 2.0 in July, and the casual Italian spot's 60-seat bar and 120-seat dining room have been mobbed ever since. It bears only a passing resemblance to its Washington Street predecessor, its interior a rustic-meets-elegant blend of marble, glass and white oak that feels light, airy and urban. Even when the bar crowds are thick, the soaring ceilings keep it from feeling cramped, and an outdoor patio with heat lamps is open—and packed—whenever the weather cooperates. The old Nebo? What old Nebo?

The Pallotta sisters brought over a kitchen staff of 30 from the previous spot (and hired more); they also brought most of the menu, which revolves around shareable Southern Italian-influenced appetizers, handmade pastas and pizza. It's no surprise, then, that the cooks are turning out this food like they've been doing it for years. The calamari fritti ($14) are downright perfect, the crisp rings and tentacle pieces salty and tender. Another carryover, the budino ($15), has great texture, the mousse-like goat cheese panna cotta a delicate contrast to the crunch and chew of chopped medjool dates and hazelnuts. The cheese-smothered and much-loved zucchini lasagna ($23) looks like it'll be leaden but turns out to be feather-light, the fried zucchini slices cut super-thin, the housemade ricotta airy.

Other dishes got subtle upgrades. Funghi selvaggi ($14) is as rich as I remember, only now the pile of wild mushrooms and mascarpone polenta comes topped with a runny fried egg. Mussels ($14), formerly served in tomato sauce, are now steamed in a creamy lemon-and-mascarpone base with sliced fennel; they're garnished with fennel fronds and charred bread. It's a gorgeously simple preparation.

The pizza offerings are noticeably fewer now (and were completely unavailable for the first few months of service because of a problem with the ovens). They've removed a lot of "dead weight" from the pizza menu, Carla explains, focusing instead on best-sellers like the prosciutto e fichi ($18), a fabulously salty-sweet pairing of house-made fig jam, prosciutto and gorgonzola, and adding stars like the sage- and mushroom-speckled lardo ($18). There are three takes on the classic Neapolitan pie, from the basic tradizionale ($15) to the Margherita ($16), which has fresh mozzarella, and the Pugliese ($17), topped with creamy burrata. They're all impressive, though not perfect; the crust is flavorful but lacks the wonderfully charred, blistered edge that set the old kitchen's pizzas apart. Perhaps the new ovens just need a little breaking in.



Pastas are a bit uneven. Both the casarecce with peas ($19) and tagliatelle with smashed broccoli and shrimp ($22) featured wan, overcooked veggies. If you're counting carbs, skip those in favor of more pizza and a side of the grilled, olive-oil-brushed bread ($2.50).

And give the new, extensive cocktail menu a try. The first time I tried the Gin Ginger ($12), a combination of gin, Lillet, and ginger beer with a slow-melting cube of grapefruit juice floating in the center, I may have called it my favorite drink in the city. Another worthy pick is the Sorel ($12), a combo of black-raspberry-infused vodka, sorel liqueur and fresh lemon juice.

Another new must-have? Dessert, which got little attention at the North End spot. Here, diners linger over the sweet Nutella pizza ($14) and the cherry- and pistachio-topped spumoni sundae ($12). Explains Carla: "We wanted to create a really relaxing space, and we did. Now people are hanging longer." Atmosphere, it seems, is everything. ◆

SkinHealth Centers

Q: ARE THERE ANY EFFECTIVE TREATMENTS FOR CELLULITE?

A: Cellulite is normal fat beneath the skin which appears bumpy because it pushes against connective tissue, septae, causing the skin above it to pucker. Even thin people have cellulite.

There have been many treatments over the years, including creams, massage, and mesotherapy; none of which work very well. The FDA has approved a new cellulite treatment using using radio frequency (RF) energy.

The RF energy heats up the skin tissues that contribute to cellulite, helping to break down the fat and enhance the elasticity of the septae, thus reducing or eliminating cellulite. There is no pain and no downtime.

We have been using this new technology at SkinHealth and our clients have been thrilled with the results.

TOM HANKS PLAYS A MAN KIDNAPPED BY SOMALI PIRATES IN CAPTAIN PHILLIPS.

CAPTAIN PHILLIPS ★★★½
Starring Tom Hanks, Barkhad Abdi, Faysal Ahmed, Barkhad Abdirahman and Catherine Keener. Screenplay by Billy Ray. Directed by Paul Greengrass. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Sean Burns

NEED A BIGGER BOAT

WE ALL FOLLOWED THIS ON THE NEWS as it happened. In April 2009, the cargo freighter Maersk Alabama was hijacked by four Somali pirates. Unable to control the ship, they fled in a lifeboat, holding Capt. Richard Phillips for ransom. Before reaching shore, a team of Navy SEALs put an abrupt end to the hostage negotiations.

Director Paul Greengrass' harrowing, bluntly titled Captain Phillips is based on its subject's own memoir, the even more bluntly titled A Captain's Duty: Somali Pirates, Navy SEALs and Dangerous Days at Sea. But this is a tricky picture with a lot on its mind, at times both pulse-pounding and deeply mournful. It reminded me of Zero Dark Thirty in the way it rewires action-movie conventions to remove any trace of triumphalism, and much like Kathryn Bigelow's procedural masterpiece it also manages to keep you on the edge of your seat while telling a story to which everybody already knows the ending.

After an awful opening scene that's presumably supposed to set up our hero's idyllic home life or some such nonsense, we quickly move on to the high seas with the Maersk Alabama—an unwieldy vessel with a crew of weary, middle-aged union guys who aren't getting paid enough for this crap. The captain is a brusque taskmaster short on people skills, which comes as something of a surprise since he's played by Tom Hanks. Stifling his natural affability beneath a grey goatee and a honking New England accent, Hanks isn't trying to be liked here. But it's he alone who seems to comprehend the dangers of this shipping company sending them out alone and unprotected off the coast of Somalia.

A tiny skiff containing four starving drug addicts with AK-47s theoretically shouldn't be much of a threat to such a massive freighter. Yet your stomach sinks to realize just how helpless they are out there in this lumbering beast of a ship. Whether in his shattering 9/11 docudrama United 93 or in the middle two (and most excellent) Bourne movies he directed, Greengrass has always been obsessed with just how easily complacent Goliaths can be toppled by dangerous, determined Davids.

It's always rubbed me the wrong way that Tom Hanks scored his biggest success by playing a simpleton in Forrest Gump.

This is a hell of a thriller. Greengrass gets a lot of guff for popularizing the shaky, hand-held camera aesthetic that has turned most American action movies into visual mush. But what his imitators fail to grasp is the precision with which this director lays out spatial geography. The evasive countermeasures and eventual boarding in Captain Phillips are flawlessly conveyed, with seasick twitches and tremors merely adding to the frightening you-are-there immediacy.

And then there's Hanks. It's always rubbed me the wrong way that Tom Hanks scored his biggest success by playing a simpleton in Forrest Gump. Then again, most things about Forrest Gump rub me the wrong way. Even going back to his early comedy days, few contemporary stars exude such quicksilver intelligence. There's a remarkable alacrity behind those eyes, and I think the reason audiences lined up in droves to see Hanks trying to survive on a desert island while talking to a volleyball is that we love to watch him think through things.

Those sly glances get a workout in Captain Phillips. With the rest of the crew stashed in the engine room, Hanks leads the pirates on a white-knuckle wild goose chase through the ship, dropping coded hints and setting up sabotage while trying to talk a good game. Fussy, by-the-book Phillips is improvising here, and it turns out he's pretty good at it.

In its third act, Captain Phillips becomes something else altogether. We're trapped in an enclosed, claustrophobic lifeboat that looks like a children's bath toy alongside the hulking naval vessels that have surrounded it. The hopelessly outmatched Somali leader (Barkhad Abdi) foolishly, even movingly, assumes he'll still to go to America and buy a car, but Phillips' weary gaze tells us how this is all going down.

Screenwriter Billy Ray takes great pains to humanize the pirates without ever excusing their actions. Setting up a provocative parallel, they're just impoverished kids following orders from a local tinhorn warlord, much in the same way Phillips and his crew are out here risking their necks for a measly paycheck from some corporation that couldn't care less. "We all got bosses," Hanks sighs.

The final scenes of Captain Phillips are overpowering, with Greengrass mercilessly tightening the suspense screws as Hanks fearlessly goes to emotional places we've never seen in his entire career. It's a brutal knockout of an ending, bold enough to leave you with the nagging impression that good hasn't conquered evil so much as a few mosquitoes have been swatted. This film sticks in your gut. ◆

Music / Paul Robicheau

BACK TO THE FUTURE

VIRTUOSO SCION DWEEZIL ZAPPA RETHINKS THE GUITAR TO KEEP HIS FATHER'S CHALLENGING COMPOSITIONS ALIVE.

THE GIFTS OF THE LATE FRANK ZAPPA got overshadowed by his satiric repartee. That's what Dweezil Zappa muses when it comes to his father's legacy. "Anyone I talked to who was under 35 didn't know a lot about my dad's music," says the younger Zappa guitarist, 44. "He got lumped into this category of novelty music. Some people almost thought of it like Weird Al Yankovic."

That's why Dweezil launched Zappa Plays Zappa, an ensemble that focuses on the rhythmic and melodic complexities of his father's groundbreaking music, an intricate yet playful blend of rock, jazz, R&B and classical music. "He was a composer who was using a rock band as his orchestra for the most part, but he actually did write serious classical music," Dweezil says of his father, who died of prostate cancer in 1993 at age 52. "So it was important to me to actually represent that as the majority of his work as opposed to the comedic side."

When Zappa Plays Zappa first hit the road in 2006, it mixed younger musicians with noted Frank Zappa alumni like Napoleon Murphy Brock, Terry Bozzio and Steve Vai. "That was brought into the picture with promoters, particularly the first year out," Dweezil says. "But the original intent was to have a band that can play the music but has no previous affiliation—and a younger band, so people can see that this is timely music and inspirational to any generation."

To that end, Zappa Plays Zappa has settled into a younger, leaner group that features Scheila Gonzalez (sax, flute, keyboards), Ben Thomas (lead vocals, trumpet, trombone), Chris Norton (keyboards), Kurt Morgan (bass) and Ryan Brown (drums) in addition to guitarist Dweezil.

The sextet currently depends on its multitasking dexterity to perform Frank Zappa's classic 1973 live album Roxy & Elsewhere in its entirety for a tour that brings Zappa Plays Zappa to House of Blues on Nov. 2. "There's a challenge," Dweezil says of recreating an album that was recorded by a band nearly twice as large, including horns, dual drummers and the darting marimba lines of Ruth Underwood. "But the texture of the arrangements is still intact."

He certainly picked up his end on guitar, having woodshedded for years to learn his father's music—and altered his technical approach in the process. "It's kind of like getting a lobotomy and training for the Olympics," says Dweezil, who plays a replica of his father's classic Gibson SG. "He started off as a drummer, so his approach to guitar playing was much more rhythmic to begin with, and then he'd attach notes to the rhythms. That was the most complicated part."

Growing up, Dweezil drew additional inspiration from other guitar virtuosos who came by the house to see his father, including Allan Holdsworth and Eddie Van Halen. (In a popular YouTube clip from a Zappa Plays Zappa concert, he recalls being 12 years old for Van Halen's first visit.) "Just seeing people play up close makes a big difference to understanding technique," says Dweezil, who's offering a master class as a separate event the afternoon of his Boston show. "I [cover] improvisational strategies and things that have helped open new doors for me."

He says he'd prefer to play a variety of music each night as opposed to focusing on one of his father's 60-plus albums, but that Roxy & Elsewhere (like Apostrophe on a 2010 tour) provides a fitting introduction to Zappa's sprawling catalog. And in addition to Roxy classics like "Pygmy Twylyte," "More Trouble Every Day" and the 16-minute freak-out "Be-Bop Tango (of the Old Jazzmen's Church)," Zappa Plays Zappa has been sprinkling in other old favorites like "Montana" and "Muffin Man"—and even "Back in Black" by hard rockers AC/DC.

"We did that just as a complete goof," Dweezil says from his tour bus in Chicago, noting that the

"I was once trying to come up with a word to describe the type of person who would only wear a rock 'n' roll T-shirt, and in two seconds, he came up with insignoramus, which was a combination of insignia and ignoramus."

AC/DC song came up at a rehearsal with a band tech who didn't know the lyrics. "We were laughing that you could sing anything in that song," he says. "The words didn't matter."

Words did matter to Frank Zappa, who penned such clever hits as "Don't Eat the Yellow Snow" and "Dancin' Fool" and shared his wicked sense of humor around the house. "We'd always play a game where you'd try to make up words that should be in the dictionary but aren't," Dweezil says. "I was once trying to come up with a word to describe the type of person who would only wear a rock 'n' roll T-shirt, and in two seconds, he came up with insignoramus, which was a combination of insignia and ignoramus. He didn't have to think about it."

In turn, since Frank Zappa covered classic rock epics "Stairway to Heaven" (with the ironic twist of horns in place of the guitar solo) and "Whipping Post," perhaps he would have appreciated an AC/DC song as a curveball in the repertoire of Zappa Plays Zappa, a group that might be considered a tribute band.

"Orchestras are technically cover bands," Dweezil says. "They're carrying the tradition of great music into the future. So that's really what Zappa Plays Zappa is. We're an electric orchestra that performs his music, and it needs to be carried into the future." ◆

FALSE PREMISES

HONESTY AND BAR CONVERSATIONS DON'T MIX.

WHEEL UP: A BMX "trick" useful for bar lying

My buddy Millman and I are sitting at the pool bar at the Hard Rock Orlando when the woman a few seats over sidles up to initiate a conversation. A half-hour earlier there were several guys sitting between her and us, but I notice that now they've all fled the scene—an ominous sign. She's wearing a bikini, her skin is a canvas of tattoos and she seems as if she's been at the Hard Rock pool for a little too long. Like maybe she got there around 2007 and now lives under the waterslides, emerging only to sunbathe, drink Waboritas and occasionally wander indoors to admire Lance Bass' tracksuit. I direct a thousand-yard stare toward the TV above the bar and prepare to deploy my calculated New England-style standoffishness, engaging just enough to maintain decorum but not enough to encourage her. I needn't worry, though, because between us there is still an important defensive rampart: Millman.

"So what're you guys doing here?" she asks as she slides over next to Millman. I'm as surprised as she is when he cheerfully replies, "We're pro BMX riders." Thus we're plunged into the wonderful world of bar lying.

I listen as Millman regales her with stories of life on the pro BMX circuit, self-effacingly admitting that he's getting a little old for the BMX game. "That's why I've been working to cultivate the next generation," he says, gesturing to me. It appears that I'm now a character in Millman's increasingly elaborate web of deceit.

"Hell, these days I'm the old guy myself!" I say, a statement that would undoubtedly be true if I were, in fact, paid to ride a small bicycle in a daring manner. "And this guy here," I say, gesturing to Millman, "he won't tell you himself, but he's pretty much the patriarch of the sport." And there we are, two grizzled BMX riders just trying to figure out how to keep up with a world we no longer truly understand.

Perhaps I associate with a bunch of liars, but inventing fictional barroom personas is common practice among my friends. I know a guy in Chicago who, before he got engaged, would tell girls different stories according to the season. "In the winter, I was a plane de-icer at O'Hare, and I would promise to take them to exotic locations," he says. "In the summer, I was captain of the Seadog." (That's the Chicago version of Codzilla.) "Sometimes I like to take the boat out by myself," he says, revisiting his imaginary alternative career. "You're just out there alone on the water, so close to the bustle of the city and yet so far away. It's very peaceful." It sounds so romantic, fake boat-captaining.

My friends Joe and Lauren profess that they have, on occasion, been faux-employed as an astronaut recruiter and an escort. "You went with 'astronaut recruiter?'" I ask Joe, skeptical that anybody would believe that one. "Shhh, shhhh, shhhh!" he says, looking around furtively. "It's kind of a classified program. I shouldn't even talk about it." Lauren says she plays the escort card to end unwanted conversations, but that gambit sounds like it has strong potential to lead to an even worse type of conversation.

An informal survey among Facebook friends reveals that you pathological fibbers have a deep bench of deeply implausible professions. Nose model for the Flonase box (which I'm not even sure has a nose on it). Air traffic controller. Trapeze artist, from a large family of trapeze artists, who is getting stressed out because the act requires him to catch his mom. Stevie Wonder's studio guitarist. Blimp pilot. Urinal cake designer. Professional bowler. Professional bowler in Canada. I particularly enjoy that last one, since it's predicated on the idea that women at bars already recognize all the American bowlers.

An informal survey among Facebook friends reveals that you pathological fibbers have a deep bench of deeply implausible professions.

But back to my life as a pro BMX rider. Millman tells the woman that I'm married and have kids, and she grows wide-eyed and almost a little indignant. "How can you have such a dangerous job when you have a family?" she asks. I lean back, take a thoughtful sip of my drink and reply, "You can't think about that. You just have to go off every jump like you're going into the foam pit." Millman nods knowingly. Yes, of course. The foam pit.

I don't know why it's so fun to lie to strangers, but it really is. And I think everyone's become a little bit of a pro at it thanks to the constant low-level lying that constitutes social media. Yes, your life is an ongoing series of victories, and your baby is gifted! And I just got hired to do the BMX stunts in the remake of the movie Rad. Honest. ◆

Soroff On / Marissa Castelli

BREAKING THE ICE

THE FIGURE SKATER TELLS US ABOUT CHEESY COSTUMES, HIGH HEELS AND OLYMPIC GOALS.

OLYMPIC PAIRS FIGURE SKATING HOPEFUL MARISSA Castelli, 23, was born and raised in Rhode Island. The daughter of a skating coach, she was on the ice by the age of 3 and started training with the U.S. Figure Skating Basic Skills Program by the age of 5. Since 2006, she's been partnered with Russian-born skater Simon Shnapir, who grew up in Sudbury. Together, they won the 2013 U.S. Championships and took home the bronze at the 2009 World Junior Championships, the best finish for an American pair. They train at the Skating Club of Boston and are early favorites to make the U.S. Olympic team.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So where do you keep all your medals and ribbons?
MARISSA CASTELLI: I keep them in a drawer. I don't really have a shrine. They're just sort of tossed in a drawer.

Your mom is a skating coach. Did you feel the pressure of that? Well, it definitely got me into skating, but I was a pretty sassy little girl, and I didn't want my mom telling me what to do when I was skating. So I moved on from my mom when I was like 5 or 6.

Worst part of training? Expectation to perform every single day. It's a high-intensity sport, and coming in every morning, skating two programs and doing cardio... Just training every single day is the worst part of training.

What's the best part? Definitely the reward of competing, just going out there and getting ready for a long program, and knowing you're ready is just the greatest feeling.

Tell me the ways in which Boston is just so much better than Providence. [Laughs] Well, Providence is pretty awesome, but Boston has the Freedom Trail, the Common, the Garden, Newbury Street. I love Providence. Don't get me wrong. It's just that in Boston, there's a LOT going on.

So do you have any rituals or superstitions before you compete? I always put my right skate on before my left. Simon and I do a hand-slap before we skate. And I take a deep breath before my long program. That's about it. I'm not very superstitious.

Don't you ever get dizzy from all the twirling? Yes. Sometimes, I have to literally close my eyes when Simon is either throwing or spinning me. Of course, I never let him see.

Hardest move to pull off? Our twist. He has to throw me up in the air, and I have to do three rotations before he catches me.

Any off-ice chemistry with Simon? No. Simon and I have more of a brother/sister relationship, like we love each other sometimes, and we hate each other sometimes. We scream at each other. We're just purely skating partners.

How about your off-ice workouts? Lucky for us, our training center has a gym in the back, and as soon as we're done with a training session, we go back there and do cardio, interval training, strength training. We have stretch classes. A few other skaters and I will go out and do pilates or yoga together. We mix it up.

Do you wear high heels? I do. I like to consider it working on my ankle strength.

Do you have nice feet? Are they perfectly pedicured? My feet are actually really good-looking for a skater. No crazy bumps. I recently lost one of my toenails, which is gross, but I definitely keep my feet looking nice.

Worst injury you ever had? Four years ago, Simon and I were skating backward, and this other guy was too, and we collided. When I fell, I landed on his blade, and it cut the inside of my leg. I had maybe six internal stitches and maybe 10 external.

Ouch. Favorite place to compete? Paris. I'm just in love with that city. Every free second I had, I'd be at the Eiffel Tower, or at a cafe having coffee. My mom and I barely waited for my program to be over before we were out shopping.

Are you a good dancer? I'm OK. I'm pretty shy about it. I'm not in the middle of the dance floor at a club unless I'm there to make a total fool of myself.

Ever had to tell Simon that his breath smelled like onions or anything like that? [Laughs] No. Due to the choreography, we do get pretty close, and there was a time a few years ago when he would put on way too much cologne, but I don't think I ever told him. I think he figured it out himself.

"I'm not in the middle of the dance floor at a club unless I'm there to make a total fool of myself."

What's up with all the cheesy costumes in figure skating? Well, obviously there are some bad costumes out there, but it's all about personal preferences. The Russians have their style. People in Canada are making costumes... It's all a matter of taste.

Favorite music to skate to? Well, right now we're skating to the instrumental soundtrack of Skyfall, which is pretty amazing. I love it.

Do you have any bar tricks or things you do to impress strangers at parties? Generally, I lie about what I do. When I'm in a bar, I feel like people probably think I shouldn't be in a bar, because I'm a figure skater, so I'll evade the question.

If you didn't skate, what would you do? I'd definitely be a gymnast. I'm very flexible and I used to do gymnastics before skating. But it came to a point where I had to choose. I do have some pretty cool tricks still, though.

Is winter your favorite season? No. I'm really more of a summer person. I love tropical places. The rink where we train is pretty warm as it is, but we can pop outside if we want to warm up in nice weather. In winter, it's miserable because it gets cold in the rink and it's snowing outside.

So are you going to bring home the gold? That's such an ultimate goal of ours, and we're definitely hoping to get to the Olympics, but we're taking it one step at a time. We have our two grands prix, and hopefully we'll skate well enough at nationals to get to the Olympics. ◆

The Importance of Being Earnest

BY ANDREW RIMAS
PHOTOGRAPHED BY HOLLY RIKE

The first salvo of deposit checks secured the date, the shrimp station and the boutonnieres.

IT WOULD BE A BLACK-TIE WEDDING, FRAMED by the polish and picture windows of the Back Bay. The afternoon's photographs would look staunchly Bostonian, shot against the green light of the Public Garden. There would be white dogwood branches on the tables and pink peonies in the bouquets; the bridesmaids would wear gray. We'd even arranged a prosecco bar with muddled raspberries and bottles of cassis, with miniature sundaes arriving at dessert. I'd bought shoes to practice our Viennese waltz. All that remained was the choice of salad.

"Darling," I said to my fiancee, Siga Bielkus, as we were tweaking the registry for linens. "Do you want me to incorporate anything in particular in our wedding vows?" I was thinking something like a Rumi poem.

"Hmm. Can't say off the top of my head," she said. "I'm sure you can figure it out."

And thus is hatched a crisis in a writer's soul.

You can't spend a career splashing in light entertainment without inhaling some of the vapors. Nabokov wrote, "I think like a genius, I write like a distinguished author, and I speak like a child." To which a lifestyle journalist might counter, "I think like a cynic, I write like a court jester, and I speak like a salesman." It becomes, after so many articles on handcrafted local cheeses, hard to compose a sentence that's not inflected with a smirk.

That's the danger of working with pop culture instead of Big Themes, like love and mortality, the thin gauze of consciousness, the presence or loss of God.

Amari cocktails are huge right now, but we'll soon be seeing an influx of specialty digestifs from other parts of Europe. Next round: Dalmatia!

It becomes, after so many articles on handcrafted local cheeses, hard to compose a sentence that's not inflected with a smirk.

See?

Which makes the job of writing our wedding vows so difficult. There are a hundred rhapsodies I could compose about Siga's beauty: the flawless brushstroke of her smile, the mischief in her right dimple, her eyes that defy the labels of mere colors but that have a luster, like a Klimt painting, of deepest gold. Not to mention, she's as grounded as a badger, and never resorts to weird animal references as a substitute for wit. But she's not a writer.

I, ostensibly, am. My books have been published in multiple languages. I've been a finalist for the James Beard Award for Writing & Literature. Yet this simple assignment rattled me like a maraca. The lifestyle journalist's instinct is to play, and not to always play nice. He has to pinch and harry sentences, and, more to the point, to never bungle overmuch into sincerity. So it's a piece of cake to toss out 1,000 words on chocolate tortes, but it's crucifixion to write an earnest farewell card.

Flip through this magazine and you'll read voices that are knowing, a little obsequious, salted with snark. Weddings are a poor stage for snark. Snark—or rather its godmother, dry humor—has damaged my record of giving best man speeches, which should always be to praise, not to bury. After a few glasses of wine, I usually end up making a joke about the groom's suspected sexual orientation, and everyone looks down at their shoes. To marry the love of my life, I needed to do better.

At a recent gala for the Boston Lyric Opera, as we fretted with the short rib, I described this predicament to the ladies at my table. "My husband and I wrote our own vows," recalled one. "But we wrote them separately, so we didn't know what the other person was going to say."

This struck me as a charming idea, but overweighted with expectations. The fear of one-upmanship, that your partner would come across as more sincere or loving, was too pronounced. And you didn't want surprises.

"Yes, that's a good point," agreed the lady. But she had apparently dodged that particular threat, and the conversation moved to the subject of French ovens. Later, during a performance of The Magic Flute, Pamina and Papageno sang a duet about marriage ("The circle soon must be complete. / Two become one and thus it should be. / Two learn to live in harmony.") It's a stately melody, but more lilting than a wedding march, with a strong current of yearning instead of pomp. Sitting in the darkness, my hand on Siga's knee, I thought, for perhaps the thousandth time, how lucky I was to be marrying her, and I remembered the customary Rite of Marriage, a pledge to have and to hold, for better or poorer, in sickness and in health. Until death. Excellent points, all, and ones that I wanted to steal. The trick would be to personalize them.

According to Rebecca Mead's One Perfect Day: The Selling of the American Wedding, the wedding industry—from gown factories in China to microwaved mini quiches in the hotel kitchen—is estimated to be worth about $160 billion. The only means to sustain this sort of economic leviathan (economic bridezilla?) is by creating boundless demand. Hence the emphasis on personalizing every detail, down to the color of your chair ribbons.

This idea, of course, also seeps into the one part of the event that costs nothing: the words.

"Couples are looking to personalize every aspect of their wedding," says Emily Starr Alfano, owner of mStarr Event Styling + Design. "The whole ceremony is being customized with readings, officiants who are family or friends, and meaningful keepsakes."

I figured a ring would be meaningful enough. But the vows to accompany it required a method. I began by writing a list of what I love most about my fiancee, coming up with words like "compassionate," "good" and "super hot, especially in yoga pants." I lingered over these rosy images for a moment, then drew a line underneath and listed some of the nettlesome bits of our relationship. These were largely to do with my failings at finances, dancing, household chores, personal grooming, spiritual development, cardio training, the work ethic and emotional maturity.

For the thousandth-and-first time, I couldn't believe my luck in marrying her.

My plan was to plunder the two lists for details I could use in our version of "for better or poorer, in sickness and in health." And by promising, say, that she would love me even if I broke both my legs attempting a Viennese waltz, she would be pruning one of the thorns in our marriage's flowerbed. Likewise, I would swear to always create memorable experiences for us, and to dust the bookshelves.

But the lines read too prosy, too commonplace. They were about quirks and foibles, the small details of affection. I could imagine a pair of rabbits reciting them before a congregation of field mice. They should have been about cosmic pledges, indissoluble oaths. A promise of love until extinction. If I had a soul, I was delivering it to her with these words, so they needed to evoke the eternal firmament, the light from supernovas and the Buddha's smile. These vows had to stick.

I deleted the lists and started again.

Instead of using Siga's qualities as a topic, I began at the nub. After the wine had been drunk and the char from the filet mignon been scrubbed from the skillets, long after our wedding day was just an overlooked, well-dusted photograph, love was the only reason for any of it.

And what did that mean, exactly? "As day brings the sun, so love brings forth love." This isn't a line from a soft-drink commercial, but rather one from that Magic Flute duet. I remembered a conversation in which I told Siga that she'd taught me the meaning in Socrates' lesson that romantic love could open a person to a broader experience of love, to a brush with the divine. Dante had suggested this when Beatrice led him into the heavens. It was this love—enveloping, ecstatic, timeless—that ought to be the subject of the vows, since that was the crux of why we were doing this at all.

So I wrote that everything that I ever was or would become belonged to her, that she was my sky and my earth. That every day with her was a gift I would consciously cherish. That I would honor that gift by devoting the whole of my life to her. And that she looked mighty fine in yoga pants.

Of course, I deleted the last part. I'd need material for the speeches. ◆

FIGHTING CHANCE

The four-night series Ang Lee, Close Up showcases the acclaimed director's intimate emotional dramas, such as The Ice Storm and Lust, Caution. But it also features a certified blockbuster: Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. Focused on a legendary sword, its protectors and the outlaws trying to steal it, the high-flying martial-arts-fueled adventure became the highest-grossing foreign-language film in U.S. history, in no small part thanks to visually striking fight scenes that defy gravity in bamboo treetops, multi-story buildings and desert caves. Kick back on Oct. 26 at the Harvard Film Archive. Hannah Brown

Reviews by Sean Burns

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

A.C.O.D. ★ ½ One of those weird, no-budget comedies full of the director's famous friends, this peculiar sudden misfire stars Parks and Recreation's Adam Scott as a fussy, neurotic 30-something attempting to keep his spiteful parents (Richard Jenkins and Catherine O'Hara) apart while planning the wedding of his younger brother. Amy Poehler stomps through scenes as a trophy wife looking for something to play with, while Scott fumbles with commitment, discovering far too late for plausibility's sake that his awful childhood became a best-seller written by his therapist (Jane Lynch). Yes, it's another movie where Jane Lynch plays a therapist. In this low-aiming Sundance film, we're supposed to cheer on Scott because he can't quite make himself settle down with Mary Elizabeth Winstead and secretly wants to cheat with Jessica Alba. Director Stu Zicherman pads out the ending with testimonials from adult children of divorce (hence the title) blabbing about their childhoods, as if that would lend this nonsense credibility. Adam Scott is very funny on television, but can't carry a movie. (At Kendall Square.)

Blue Jasmine ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature has become a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Don Jon ★ Joseph Gordon-Levitt brings to his performances a sly, understated intelligence that often allows him to abscond with scenes out from under the noses of his more openly demonstrative co-stars. Which is all a roundabout way of saying it's a terrible idea to cast this guy as The Situation. Written and directed by the enterprising young actor, Don Jon is a barn-door-broad burlesque of Joisey stereotypes and holy-cannoli accents. Snapping gum and pulling faces as the title character, Gordon-Levitt stars as a neat-freak, fitness-obsessed lothario. This handsome bartender has an aversion to wearing shirts with sleeves; he's a dimwitted chick magnet, hooked on Internet porn. A compulsive masturbator with a penchant for flattened vowels, Jon scores most nights of the week, and then secretly retires to his living room and finishes himself off in front of the computer with a handful of Kleenex. Like most current indies, Don Jon is curiously devoid of subplots and struggles to barely crawl across the 90-minute mark. It's a silly vanity project from a young talent who should know better. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Elysium ★ ½ Sneaking in under the wire to wrestle the award for this summer's most stupidly illogical screenplay away from Star Trek Into Darkness, director Neill Blomkamp's follow-up to 2009's nifty (if wildly overpraised) District 9 is a health care/immigration allegory that makes less sense the more you think about it. It's 2154 and the one-percenters have moved on up to a deluxe space station in the sky, leaving polluted, overpopulated Earth in the condition of a Rio de Janeiro favela. Matt Damon stars as an ex-con factory worker with a nasty case of radiation poisoning, attempting to crash the orbiting gated community for access to high-tech tanning beds that cure every illness. Jodie Foster is just awful as the hard-nosed homeland-security honcho barking orders to kill all the poor people with an accent from Planet Brando. Devoid of nuance, characterization or coherence, Elysium staggers from one arbitrary, unmotivated action sequence to another, and even Damon—normally the most reliable actor in movies—seems to lose interest about halfway through. (In the suburbs.)

Enough Said ★★★ 1/2 A bittersweet farewell to the great James Gandolfini, this romance from writer-director Nicole Holofcener is funny, sad and wise about the crazy ways we torment ourselves in this thing called love. But unlike most synthetic rom-coms, Enough Said is uniquely attuned to the weary rhythms of middle age—it's about the surprise of finding someone when you've already been around the block a few times. Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a swank Los Angeles neighborhood. Gandolfini is the slovenly hunk who steals her heart. He's a big, slightly sad guy who seems to have settled for his lot in life years ago, but he's now surprised and delighted by the sudden arrival of this neurotic mess. Their chemistry is magic. She's all sharp right angles; he's a round Barcalounger Buddha. Louis-Dreyfus and Gandolfini's first date is one of the most purely pleasurable sequences I've seen this year, with two jaded, cautious people lowering their defenses and feeling each other out. Just lovely. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

The Family ★★ Robert De Niro has been lazily phoning it in for the past 15 years, so it's a bit of a shock to see him awake, alert and delivering a genuinely endearing turn in director Luc Besson's otherwise muddled comedy. The raging bull stars as a not-so-reformed wise guy relocated for the umpteenth time, this year to a sleepy French village, thanks to the witness protection program. But he and his family (wife Michelle Pfeiffer, plus kids Dianna Agron and John D'Leo) are unrepentant horrors, busting heads and blowing stuff up at the slightest sign of disrespect, which as you might expect happens quite often to ugly Americans in rural France. Besson can't reconcile his farcical construct with the regular bursts of graphic violence; it just feels confused. The film's meager pleasures are in the performances, with Pfeiffer busting out her old Married to the Mob routine and the twinkly-eyed De Niro needling gruff FBI handler Tommy Lee Jones. It's a weird movie even before De Niro ends up watching GoodFellas. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Gravity ★★★ Alfonso Cuarón's first film since 2006's Children of Men is a technical astonishment, and it's easy to see why it's been five years in the making. Gravity is first and foremost a wonder to watch, demanding to be seen on the largest screen possible. As a technological milestone, Gravity is astounding. As a movie, it's pretty OK. Sandra Bullock and George Clooney star as astronauts stranded in space after a terrifying hailstorm of Russian satellite debris makes a mess of their mission. Gravity is for all intents and purposes a computer-animated movie, with actual photography of the actors' heads stuck in the middle of the most photo-realistic CGI that I have ever seen. But then about halfway through, Gravity decides it needs to be "about" something. Yet the thunderous banality of this screenplay cannot detract from the accomplishment of Cuarón's filmmaking. I've honestly never seen anything like it, the rootless camera so indifferent to the characters, inviting us to just dwell for a bit in the vast, airless emptiness of space. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

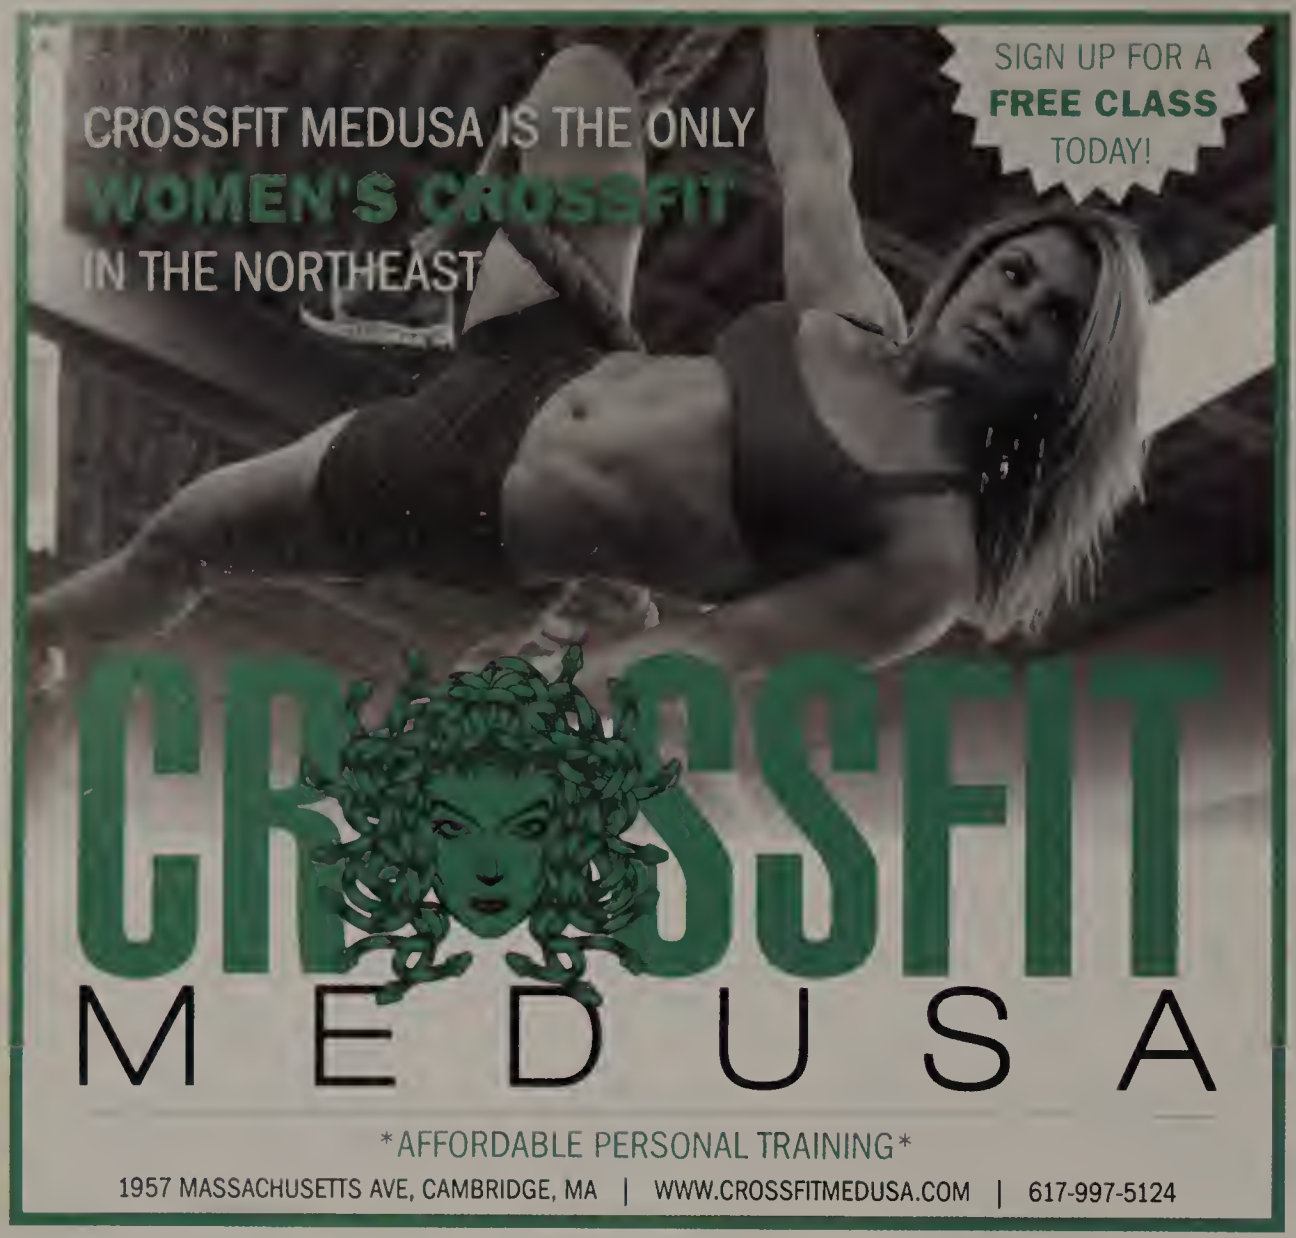
Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★ 1/2 A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Romeo & Juliet ★ 1/2 Director Carlo Carlei delivers a curiously flat, passionless take on Shakespeare's oft-filmed tale of star-crossed lovers. Absent the youthful ardor that has made the play a rite of passage for generations of heartsick teens, this is a stuffy, old-fashioned production shot on distractingly spotless sets. Downton Abbey scribe Julian Fellowes has taken a red pen to the text; the abridgment alternates between streamlining and butchery. Hotheaded young Romeo (Douglas Booth) falls head over heels for innocent Juliet

(Hailee Steinfeld), and their forbidden romance spins inevitably toward tragedy. But you're not going to find much of a spark between these secret lovers. British TV actor Booth preens through the paces like a male model, content to let his bee-stung lips do the acting for him. Steinfeld is simply adrift. She rushes through her lines as if trying to finish them as quickly as possible. It's not a good sign when the weakest scenes in Romeo & Juliet are the ones involving Romeo and Juliet. This affair feels like much ado about nothing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)



Runner Runner ★★ It's a shame Ben Affleck is always trying so hard to be a soulful leading man, because he's better than almost anybody else in the business when it comes to playing callow douchebags. This absurdly derivative thriller from the writers of Rounders stars an uncharacteristically dull Justin Timberlake as a Princeton poker ace fleeced out of his tuition money by Affleck's shady off-shore gambling website. If you've seen The Firm, The Devil's Advocate, Two for the Money or any other picture in the "corrupt mentor" genre, there won't be any surprises when Timberlake finds himself seduced into Affleck's high-rolling world of Costa Rican luxury and then, very slowly, discovers appearances can be deceiving. There's not an original note in this movie, and director Brad Furman has a knack for always putting the camera in exactly the wrong place. But the future Batman carries the lazy programmer on his shoulders, having a grand time living up to the ridiculous name "Ivan Block"—at one point even feeding his enemies to crocodiles. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rush ★★★ The great thing about Ron Howard movies is that nobody's ever going to be in any danger of missing the point. But Rush is one of his good ones. This propulsive piece of mythmaking follows the famous 1976 rivalry between Formula One racers Niki Lauda (Daniel Brühl) and James Hunt (Chris Hemsworth). Speeding around the track during appalling weather conditions in what basically amounts to a rickety go-kart strapped with tanks of rocket fuel, these hotshots boast about the fact that at least two of them die every year. For all intents and purposes, a philosophical argument takes place at 140 mph. Rush pits Brühl's no-nonsense, disciplined Lauda against Hemsworth's swaggering, womanizing Hunt during a championship season full of so many surprises you'd think the writer was a hack if this all hadn't actually happened. Screenwriter Peter Morgan sets the stage for a high-octane riff on Amadeus. Shot by the groundbreaking digital videographer Anthony Dod Mantle and cut into concussive mini-scenes by editor Daniel P. Hanley, this sucker moves. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Spectacular Now ★★ 1/2 Hard-partying Sutter (Miles Teller) has never taken anything seriously, least of all himself. But on the verge of graduating high school he finds himself unexpectedly smitten with good girl Aimee (Shailene Woodley), a delicate wallflower who lives in a world beyond his circle of never-ending keggers. She tutors him in geometry; he teaches her how to drink. But do they have a future when Sutter only lives in the now? Based on the young adult novel by Tim Tharp, The Spectacular Now is gentle, exceedingly well-acted and directed with tact and restraint by James Ponsoldt. Some folks are already calling it a coming-of-age classic. But I couldn't get past the cloddish screenplay by (500)

Days of Summer writers Scott Neustadter and Michael H. Weber, which reiterates and underlines the themes in bright red, then spells them out again just in case anybody missed anything. Take a drink every time these characters deliver monologues about "living in the now," and you'll be in worse shape than the alcoholics onscreen. (In the suburbs.)

The Trials of Muhammad Ali ★★ Muhammad Ali's journey from pariah to icon says so much about the contradictions of this country's history, there's probably no way any single movie could do it justice (though Michael Mann's stubbornly artsy, underrated 2001 biopic Ali comes close). Content to remain outside the ring, Bill Siegel's documentary utilizes talking-head clips and archival footage in an attempt to contextualize the years-long furor and eventual Supreme Court battle over Ali's refusal to serve in Vietnam. You won't find Howard Cosell here, and I think that might be why Siegel's narrow focus sounds admirable in theory, but feels so thin and limited in practice. Consigning the fighter's remarkable feats of athleticism as a footnote and sticking strictly to religion and politics takes away what made him Muhammad Ali. It's a maddeningly incomplete portrait of the champ on the defensive, where he was never at his best. Throughout the film we long to see the swagger and the grace of the loudmouth know-it-all who could call himself "The Greatest," because he was. (At Kendall Square.)

The World's End ★★ Critics aren't supposed to admit such things, but we all have aesthetic blind spots. It's part of the human condition. Not everything works for everybody, particularly when it comes to comedy. Director Edgar Wright and his frequent collaborators Simon Pegg and Nick Frost are revered as gods in many circles, telling tales of stunted, funny men dragged kicking and screaming toward adulthood thanks to the outside interference of popular genre-film conventions. 2004's Shaun of the Dead was a promising debut, with two slackers on the margins of a zombie apocalypse. Less so was 2007's Hot Fuzz, a goof on buddy-cop cliches, and now The World's End did nothing for me at all. Pegg stars as a bleary drunkard dragging his middle-aged friends to re-enact a pub crawl from their teens, only to discover their hometown has been taken over by alien robots. I guess I'm just tired of the routine, respecting Wright's carefully rhyming compositions and frenetic editing without enjoying them very much at all. Your personal mileage may vary. (In the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

WITHIN SIGHT Twenty years after they launched in the post-grunge scene, Third Eye Blind have their sights locked on the finish line. Best known for '90s radio hits such as "Semi-Charmed Life" and "Never Let You Go," the group released their fourth album, Ursa Major, on self-owned label Mega Collider Records in 2009, with insightful lyrics and sprightly rifts stemming from frontman Stephan Jenkins. The band recorded their latest—and, according to a tweet from Jenkins, final—effort in a London studio earlier this year. Hear old jams and new cuts when they play House of Blues on Nov. 4 with local alt-rockers Gentlemen Hall. / Daniel Petersen

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

WORLD VIEWS Video and film artist Eija-Liisa Ahtila's exhibition Olen-toja (Creatures) is focused on umwelt, a German word that suggests each being has a unique experience of the world. Created during the past decade, this collection of work is vibrantly filmed and often deliberately open-ended, with its multi-screen viewing allowing the audience to experience awe in everyday occurrences. Ahtila's visually captivating work explores the human condition, sometimes through dark humor (The Annunciation follows hospital patients putting on a play) and other times through a simply dark view (The House is about a woman working through psychosis). Gain some perspective at the Davis Museum at Wellesley College through Jan. 5. Jemma Douglas

GIVE ME SHELTER

British writer Will Self's latest novel, Umbrella, takes us to a London mental hospital in 1971, where a new diagnosis reveals a decades-old mystery. Catatonic and lethargic for nearly five decades, patient Audrey Dearth has spent most of her life misdiagnosed and institutionalized. Her new psychiatrist is able to awaken Audrey's past memories, including her work in an umbrella shop, which aid in her recovery and shed light on a dark family saga dating back to World War I. With rhythmic, winding paragraphs that stretch for pages, Self strikes comparisons to the style of James Joyce, and the title actually comes from a line in Ulysses: "A brother is as easily forgotten as an umbrella." Listen to Self on Oct. 30 at the Harvard Book Store. Maria Scemma

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

BROWNSTONE offers America style comfort foods with a twist

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

INTRO TO PARTYING

You couldn't swing a Victoria's Secret model without hitting someone who looked like one when Cradles to Crayons hosted its annual Back to School bash at the Liberty Hotel.

Among the hotties on hand were co-chairs April Soderstrom and Mike Morris, Miss Massachusetts USA Sarah Kidd, blond bomb shell Nina Les, whirling dervish Andy Levine, the impossibly handsome Matt Greer, babe-a-licious brunette Laura Elkman, the hale and hearty Scott Haavisto squiring the perfectly lovely Ashley Parsons, real estate maharajas Dick Friedman and Arthur Winn, fertility pioneer Merle Berger, the smokingly sexy Lauren Balsbaugh, West Coast transplant Andrew Rogal and the willowy Rachel Gilson, the va va-voom Pamela Vargas with fiance Paul Karger, the ever dapper Gustavo Leon, sex-bomb photographer Eric Levin, bodacious pallbearer Ashley Bernon and Laura Baldini, man-about-town Ian MacArthur, red-hot Red Sox wife Catherine Varitek, and so on and so forth down the list of the cool kids.

The classroom-themed photo booth inspired a frenzy of tomfoolery, as well as the evening's funniest remark:

"If going back to school had included an open bar when I was a kid, I don't think I would have minded so much."

CHICKEN OF THE SEA

There's something disconcerting about arriving at a Seafood Gala to be greeted by a guy in a rooster costume. That said, the kickoff event for the Boston Seafood Festival, held at the South Boston Fish Pier, was a thoroughly enjoyable evening (and as it turns out, the chicken getup was a nod to the wine sponsor, whose label sports a giant cock).

Because you're still rereading that last sentence, it's probably pointless to point out that you can tell it's a good party when you walk in the door and someone hands you a glass of champagne garnished with a Swedish Fish.

Spotted among the celebrants: design guru Stephen Martyak, the delightful Stephanie and Josh Bhatti, dashing entrepreneur Jonathan Bluestein with the dazzling Shira Werb, natural anti-depressant Alison Tomisato, and numerous others, who sipped and supped on delicious dishes by such celebrity chefs as Dante de Magistris, Louis DiBiccari, Anthony Susi, Will Gilson, Matthew Gaudet, Charles Draghi, Jose Duarte and Andrew Herbert, all of whom brought their A-games and had everyone wishing they'd worn an elastic waistband.

Given Boston's world renown for seafood, it's somewhat surprising that this was only the party's second annual installment, but we're thankful that someone finally thought of the idea.

As one guest put it: "It's like the Feast of the Seven Fishes on Christmas Eve, except I don't have to deal with my bitchy sister."

DESPERATE TIMES CALL FOR DESPERATE MEASURES

So that women in transition can dress to impress, Dress for Success hosted a runway show of Denise Hajjar's winter 2013 collection at the InterContinental Hotel, which attracted a predominantly power chick and uniformly stylish crowd.

Among them: emcee and health reporter Mallika Marshall, South Shore yummy mummy Kristen Daly, the soignée Nancy Broude, design avatar Jennifer Kinsman, Venezuelan beauty Yenny Malak, the maharani of accessories, Priya Jain, bootlegging beauty Catherine Stanton Schiff, champagne substitute Sarah Monaco, fashion icon Joan Jolley, doyenne of diamonds Sharyn Fireman and her other half, Murton Sudalter, first lady Angela Menino, the flawless Jacqui Budd, North Shore hot tamale Karen Vigurs-Stack, and one woman who did the one thing that can make a roomful of women more jealous than carrying a crocodile Birkin, namely, bragging about having the season premiere of Downton Abbey on DVD.

After cocktails and kibitzing, everyone repaired to the ballroom for the fashion show, which elicited "oohs," "ahhs" and a couple of "ooh-la-las" from the audience.

"It's nice to see clothes you don't need an eating disorder to wear," said one guest, to which her friend replied, "Spoken like a true size zero."

Meanwhile, another woman responded to a compliment on her haircut by saying, "Thanks. I was beginning to look like a Real Housewife of Orange County, so I had to do something." ◆

RUBAIYAT

WALKING DOWN JOY STREET IN the lowering dusk, I came upon a Subaru with a spackled rear end. It wore a dozen bumper stickers announcing that the driver had, at some point, attended Harvard, Stanford and lacrosse practice. There was an ACK decal, a Vineyard Vines whale, a Beacon Hill resident parking permit and a cluster of beach ones. The entire trunk looked like a billboard for expensive, preppy acquisitions. Rungs someone had bought on the social ladder.

Luxuries aren't what they used to be. Louis XIV would've been dumbstruck by the sensuous thrill of a microwaved Hot Pocket, to say nothing of double-ply toilet paper. Synthetic fleece, screwtop wine bottles, penicillin... all beyond the dreams of humanity for most of our 200,000-year existence. But now, in a world of 7 billion people, the most desirable luxury is to have something that others do not. It's posting on Facebook to make your "friends" jealous, or casually dropping the phrase "2013 World Champion Red Sox" into a conversation with a Yankees fan. It's planting a college bumper sticker on your Subaru. It's status, not pleasure. Which is silly, because there's an awful lot to recommend carnal pleasure.

"A loaf of bread, a jug of wine and thou" is the best wisdom I know for being happy. But no one said the jug shouldn't be filled with Pierre Morey Batard-Montrachet Grand Cru (p. 45) or the loaf spread with mousse of foie gras. In that spirit, this issue indulges in pleasures and luxuries alike.

TASTE OF VICTORY

TITLE WAVE: The Red Sox celebrate after Game 6 of the World Series.

FAITH RESTORED

THE CYNICAL CLICHE IS THAT SPORTS fans don't root for players; they root for laundry. During the 2012 season, that was the reality for Red Sox fans dealing with an unlikable lot of personalities. And by the start of the 2013 season, it seemed like nobody was doing much rooting at all—for the laundry or the players. The decade-long sellout streak ended at the second home game of the season, and Sox games were relegated to a footnote on the local sports scene.

Starting with David Ortiz's pep talk to a [illegible] in April, continuing with night after [illegible] improbable comebacks and culminating with a [illegible] Drama October run, this Band of [illegible] won the fans back.

For one, fans weren't rooting for the laundry; they were rooting for each of these players, individually and collectively. There were so many stories to choose from: Jon Lackey's year of redemption; the gutsy World Series performance by an injured Clay Buchholz; the electric enthusiasm of Mike Napoli, Jonny Gomes and Shane Victorino that overflowed in home-run trots after [illegible] of their playoff slumps; franchise [illegible] playing all season despite a torn ligament in his thumb; Koji Uehara delivering a historic pitching season while acting like a 10-year-old kid on a sugar kick; and Ortiz's postseason glory, which cemented him alongside Tom Brady as one of the two icons of this Golden Age of Boston Sports that's yielded eight titles since the turn of the century.

The beauty of these improbable champions is perhaps best seen in a kid who turned 21 years old just in time to taste the victory Champagne that filled the clubhouse after Game 6 of the World Series. Xander Bogaerts is the greatest prospect the Red Sox franchise has had since people started keeping track of those things. He was deemed not ready for regular at-bats when the postseason began, but in every opportunity he had, he succeeded. He entered Game 3 of the ALDS as a pinch-runner, and he scored. He went into the next game as a pinch-hitter, and he got on base and scored. Then he got on base again. And scored. Finally, manager John Farrell gave him a chance to start during Game 5 of the ALCS, and he never left the Sox lineup for the final eight games. Mixing his promise with his poise, he finished the postseason with hitting statistics on the team that were second only to Ortiz's.

Koji Uehara delivering a historic pitching season while acting like a 10-year-old kid on a sugar kick

Bogaerts' tale is the story of this year's Red Sox. Dismissed as unready to succeed, they never let go once given the opportunity. It's reminiscent of Jacoby Ellsbury's exciting emergence in the 2007 World Series. The possible departure of free-agent-to-be Ellsbury, by some metrics the most valuable player on the team this regular season, proves that stories and players can be cyclical. Whether they're prospects or stars, they'll all hang up the uniform for good someday. What will stay with the fans are the major moments: the joy of Ortiz's series-turning grand slam against Detroit, the sudden defeat from an obstruction call, the sudden victory from a pick-off play. And the once-in-a-lifetime pandemonium of a World Series clincher at Fenway Park. Don't lose track of these players and their stories. Collectively, they won a World Series. Individually, they won back our passion. Matt Martinelli

FOR THE SHELL OF IT

OSTRA IS POISED TO BE A BIG FISH IN DINING

EVERY MOVE MADE BY CHEF/OWNER JAMIE Mammano and the Columbus Hospitality Group, down to picking the style of oyster fork, comes after a dizzying amount of thought and attention. It's no surprise that the man Mammano's chosen as executive chef for Ostra, the group's new seafood-focused restaurant set to open this month, has roots in the seafood-focused state of Maine. Mitchell Randall has been working in the kitchen at Mistral for nearly nine years, so that made him an even easier choice for Mammano and business partner Paul Roiff.

"It's always been my dream to work for or run a seafood restaurant. Being from Maine and growing up with fish, that's always been my passion," Randall says.

Look inside Ostra, formerly the home of Mediterranean restaurant Avila, and you can't miss the emphasis on the marine. A large mural of an octopus, painted by local artist Joanna Ciampa, wraps around one wall. The dining room, off to the right, features hanging lights that evoke jellyfish tentacles. Less thematic, the lounge and bar includes a piano, which will be manned nightly.

The simple, elegant, white look of the space will be matched by Ostra's menu. Randall promises light preparations using lemon, herbs and olive oils for the fish, including a lot of local and European catches. The debut menu will feature all East Coast oysters (ostra is Spanish for "oyster," after all), but Randall may eventually add West Coast mollusks. He's especially enthusiastic about a grilled whole sea bream in a trevisano leaf with extra-virgin olive oil, lemon and snipped herbs. Menu prices will fall between moderate and upscale, while the wine list, expectedly heavy on whites, will feature domestic favorites as well as many European coastal selections.

Randall's motivation to helm the restaurant came from closer to home.

"The inspiration came from going down to the Boston fish pier and saying, 'Wow, there's a lot of fish out there locally, which a lot of people aren't utilizing,' which we're going to do," Randall says. "A lot of the inspiration came from going down there and seeing the fish come off the boats and going in and talking to the fishmongers."

Actress Jennifer Westfeldt stars in the Huntington Theatre Company's The Power of Duff, playing through Nov. 9.

THE PLAY DEALS WITH THE TOPIC OF MIXING RELIGION AND JOURNALISM. DO YOU THINK THE NEWS HAS TO BE UNBIASED WHEN IT COMES TO RELIGION? I do think so. My sister's a journalist, and I certainly come down on the side of journalistic ethics and integrity being pure, fact-based and not editorial unless it's an editorial. Which, generally speaking, the anchors delivering the news shouldn't be involved with.

YOU MADE YOUR DIRECTORIAL DEBUT IN 2011 WITH FRIENDS WITH KIDS. WHAT ARE THE CHALLENGES OF DIRECTING, WRITING AND ACTING IN ONE FILM? Well, there are many. I think every independent film presents so many challenges, from raising the money to lining up the cast, to working on a tiny budget, to making your days, to juggling all the different roles you have. All of my films were tricky that way. I was a producer, writer and actress on all three, and this was definitely the most challenging because, you know, you're already working 18-hour days. And if you're also directing, you end up working 23-hour days.

WOULD YOU EVER CONSIDER DIRECTING A PLAY? I've never thought about that. I don't really think of myself as a director; it wasn't my intention on the last film. Jake [Kasdan] was attached, and then the timing just lined up in a way where he wasn't done yet on his other film and we were going to lose the opportunity and the actors if we didn't go. And that was the only other scenario that the financiers would accept at that late hour, so I sort of got thrust into it without intending to ever direct.

YOU AND ADAM SCOTT HAVE GREAT CHEMISTRY IN THE FILM. WAS IT EVER ON THE TABLE THAT [YOUR ACTUAL PARTNER] JON HAMM WOULD PLAY THE LEAD ROLE? No, not really. I mean, I don't think we as a couple think it makes sense to play off of each other. I think Adam was so uniquely right for that role, and I think Jon was actually incredibly right for the role he played and was so brilliant in it that it seemed to be a natural fit. / Hannah Sheinberg

Eastern Standards

Leotards and Lycra minis were hardly the most radical fashions of the '80s. Thirty years ago, Japanese designers Rei Kawakubo and Yohji Yamamoto rocked Parisian runways with austere, sculptural, asymmetric and purposefully imperfect designs that flummoxed many Western critics, who derided what one termed "Hiroshima chic." But as shown by Future Beauty: Avant-Garde Japanese Fashion, on view at Salem's Peabody Essex Museum from Nov. 16 through Jan. 26, such designers have had a lasting global impact. The exhibit features nearly 100 garments from three decades, runway videos and even a "dressing room" where visitors can try on select clothes. We tapped curator Lynda Roscoe Hartigan to learn about three favorite designs. / Jacqueline Houton

NOT SO BASIC
The "new black" of Kawakubo and Yamamoto became a hot hue

▲ "It's about the power of black as a statement in terms of changing how you see clothing on the body," Hartigan says of this layered look by Kawakubo for Comme des Garçons' Autumn/Winter 1997–98 collection. "It was at a time when Western designers were totally into cyber, futuristic, sexualized approach to fashion. That black conceals a lot. The fashion tradition is all about revealing sexuality, because if you cover the body, especially a woman's body, that's much more powerful and mysterious than revealing everything right away."

▲ "After World War II, as Japan tried to figure out its place in the world, industry of particular types became very important," Hartigan says regarding this honeycombed creation by Junya Watanabe for Junya Watanabe Comme des Garçons' Autumn/Winter 2000–'01 collection. "One of them was the textile industry. Where they've really had a huge impact on the world is in industrial-style materials. That's what's going on with this garment, advances in synthetic materials that can do things other kinds of cloth simply cannot do."

▲ "It's a perfect indication of why Yamamoto is a designer who walks between the East and the West," Hartigan says of this gown from Yamamoto's Spring/Summer 1995 collection. "It's absolutely elegant in a form-fitting way. So it's not that Japanese designers rejected Western fashion tradition. But he's playing with it in a very poetic way. To me it's one of the most beautiful ensembles in the exhibition because it's very fluid. Yamamoto trained as a tailor, and his exquisite tailoring really comes across."

PRETTY STUPID

TO THE STUFFY NEWBURY STREET SALES ATTENDANT: Is it too much to ask to window shop with my friends after work on Friday? Your comment about my "casual attire" upon entering your store in comparison to my nicely dressed coworkers was unnecessary and might have cost you a commission. Haven't you ever seen Pretty Woman? "Big Mistake. Big. Huge."

Casual Friday fan

TO ANYONE WHO RETURNS A SMILE: I try to smile at almost everyone I pass on the street. I believe it's good karma and a way to pass on good energy to someone else. A lot of the time my smile is ignored, so for those who return one back, I thank you. What happened to the days of greeting your neighbors? A stranger's smile on a dreary Monday morning gives me hope for the day, and more importantly for humanity. Keep smiling, positive people!

TO THE BOYLSTON STREET STARBUCKS BARISTA: Thank you for being the Energizer Bunny of Boston. While the line to get my morning caramel macchiato is often too long to bear, your effort to charismatically shout across the store to take orders is a boost stronger than caffeine. Your use of hand gestures to direct line traffic reminds me that I made the right choice to stay in line, despite running late for work.

DRESS THE PART

Gretta Monahan posed without clothes on our January 2010 cover. Now, the Boston-bred style guru for The Rachael Ray Show is fully dressed and giving fashion advice in her first book, Style and the Successful Girl "The most important thing is feeling confident about your best self from work to play to dating," Monahan says. Here she bares all about her personal look. / Coryn Doncaster

What did you wear to your first job interview?
A black blazer with a straight pencil skirt and a bow blouse. The blouse was a fleshy pink, and I wore more of a classic pump. It was my first interview, and I was really trying to get the job, so I wanted to look sophisticated and look like I had experience.

...on your latest date night?
My husband loves dresses, so I wore a tweed-type Zara skirt, a sleeveless V-neck blouse on top and a little leather jacket, cropped. We went to a theater in New York. I get to dress a little more sexy for him, which is fun, and I wore a bootie. I love booties.

...to your first parent-teacher conference?
I ended up keeping it pretty simple. I wore a loose-fit trouser by A.L.C. It's not quite a work pant, but it has an elasticized waist and nice fabrication that kind of just drapes. I had on a printed blouse and my trench coat.

...to your last black-tie event?
I wore Stella McCartney, a pink strapless dress. I wore what I call my signature power pink because I like a girly-girl, really feminine in-your-face vibe. It energizes me.

Drink of the Moment
LANTERN TEA

PRICE: $11

INVENTOR: Big Night Entertainment Group beverage director Joe O'Connor

INGREDIENTS: Southern Comfort, Grand Marnier, fresh lemon and orange, citrus tea, orange bitters

CONCEPT: "The restaurant being Asian, and tea being a popular part of [Asian] culture, we really wanted to do a tea drink," O'Connor says That said, the tannic tea flavors in the drink are subdued under a broader citrus profile.

DANGER SIGN: SoCo is the stuff of Alabama Slammers. "It's rare to get a SoCo drink and not be embarrassed," O'Connor observes.

DANGER AVERTED: The SoCo's peach notes play off the Grand Marnier's bitter orange and cognac, with the citrus tea lowering the intensity and the sweetness. This isn't a drink for chugging to a Skynyrd soundtrack. It's a cocktail that goes surprisingly well with Red Lantern's brightly flavored dishes.

RED LANTERN
39 Stanhope St., Boston
(617-262-3900)
redlanternboston.com

IN SUMMARY: "It's refreshing, citrusy and really tasty," O'Connor says.

PAIR IT WITH: The Tik Tok chicken's sweet and sour sauce works with the drink's orange flavors. Or anything with ponzu, like the "Chirashi" Naruto roll, would play off the Grand Marnier.

CONTEXT: "We just redesigned the whole drink menu," O'Connor says. "You look at it and remember it." Apart from tiki drinks and Asian cocktails emphasizing sake (including fruit-flavored ones like a sparkling blueberry offering), the list sports statement beverages like the oversized Samoan Shipwreck, a rum and tequila punch served in a container that looks like a boat. "Overall, it's got mass appeal, fun and creativity." And nautical vessels. / Andrew Rimas

UPSTAIRS OFF THE SQUARE

A COLORFUL INSTITUTION CLOSES WITH 2013.

AND SO, AFTER MORE THAN 30 YEARS, UpStairs on the Square's run comes to an end—not with a bang or a whimper, but with a roster of festive celebrations climaxing on New Year's Eve, as befits an icon of Harvard Square hospitality and idiosyncratic glamour. Not to mention the food, created by a series of big-name chefs—Michael Leviton, Evan Deluty, Susan Regis, Steven Brand. But none are more accomplished than co-proprietress Deborah Hughes.

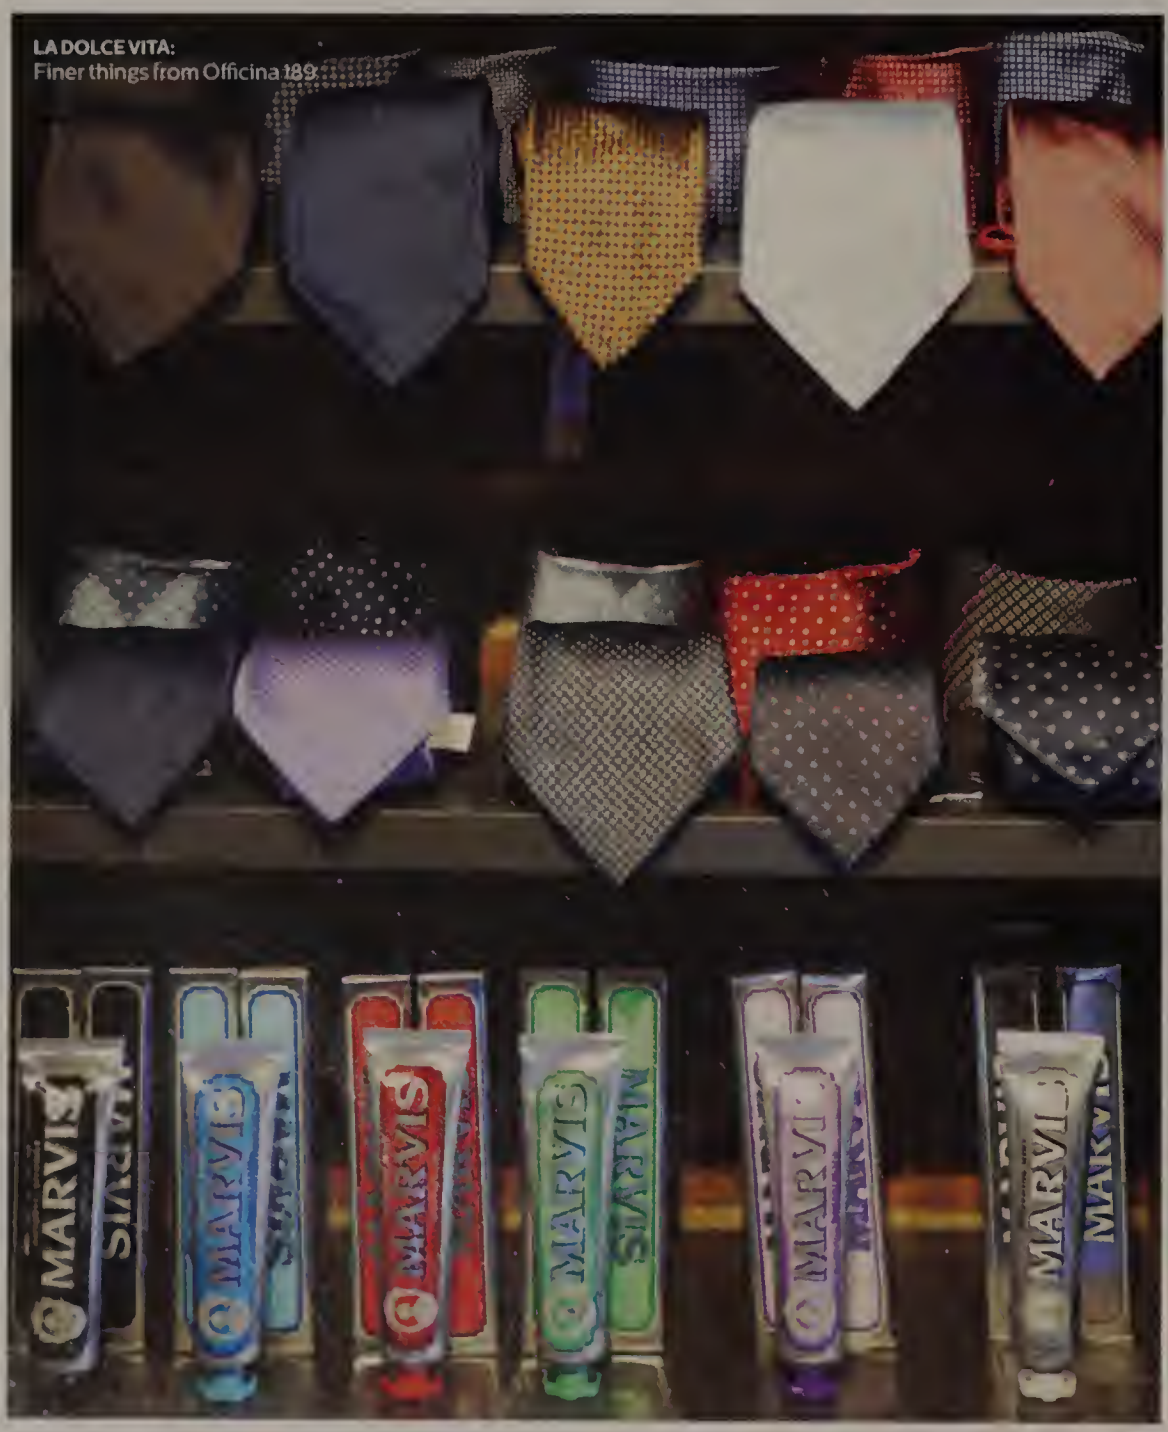
"French rigor and Italian technique" is how she defines her style of cuisine, which takes its cue from ingredients. "Simplicity is the hardest thing to do. You don't try to impose your will and torture the artichoke," she says. And Hughes may well be tending to the artichoke again in Cambridge, as she ponders opening a "supper-club"-style restaurant that would be "something smaller, something I can control," as opposed to the two-story, two-dining-room UpStairs. That building has been sold, and a new, unnamed owner is taking over the UpStairs space, including all the fabulous furnishings and whimsical decor... everything but the name.

"We're going out on a high note," says Mary-Catherine Deibel, Hughes' business partner and a longtime force in fundraising for local community organizations such as Community Servings. "I'm a worker bee; I like to work," she says, looking forward to a future "connecting people to do something great." Meanwhile, she says, "I have so much to do between now and December 31!"



The Big Ten

In other longevity news, La Morra in Brookline is celebrating its 10th birthday. Much at the Northern Italian restaurant has stayed the same over a decade—the "cicchetti" menu of small bites at the bar, for example—but co-owner Jennifer Ziskin says the wine list has grown dramatically.

A DECADE IN DOUGH: Chef/co-owner Josh Ziskin makes pasta at La Morra.

It started with 45 wines and now boasts more than 100 selections. "100 percent Italian," she says proudly. Much of the regular customer base, who dine at La Morra once or twice a week, work at the local hospitals just down the street from the restaurant's Route 9 location. Does this make La Morra the best restaurant in town in which to have a heart attack? "I don't want to say that!" laughs Ziskin. "But there would be [a doctor] in the house; I guarantee it."

LA DOLCE VITA: Finer things from Officina 189.

Purveyors: Get the Boot

The briefcases sold at Officina 189 are very fine: polished leather satchels handmade in Milan at owner Fabrizio Di Rienzo's family business, Pellux. They're the flagship product sold at the North End shop Di Rienzo opened this summer, though his first stateside storefront runs deep with goods brought over from the Boot to spoil the Italophile in you. Besides the expected Italian luxuries—perfumes, watches and silk ties rolled into spirals—check out the stretchy invisible chain necklaces sporting dainty charms, toothpaste flavors that sound like high-end tea (jasmine-mint, for example) and chic custom-made bicycles with leather-wrapped handlebar grips. / Elizabeth Bomze

Good Eats: Come Home to Roast

Pennypacker's has been hawking high-caliber sandwiches, soups and salads from its kitchen on wheels since 2011. But last month, the McGuire brothers opened a brick-and-mortar spot in Somerville's Magoun Square, giving their signature porchetta on ciabatta a permanent home. That sandwich alone is worth hustling over to eat (the shop closes at 7 pm for now), especially if you catch the pork hot out of the oven. Expect tender hunks of fatty, deeply aromatic meat with a skin-on crust that crackles like chicharrón, finished with toppings such as a drizzle of syrupy vincotto and peppery watercress. / Elizabeth Bomze

Books / Mopsy Strange Kennedy

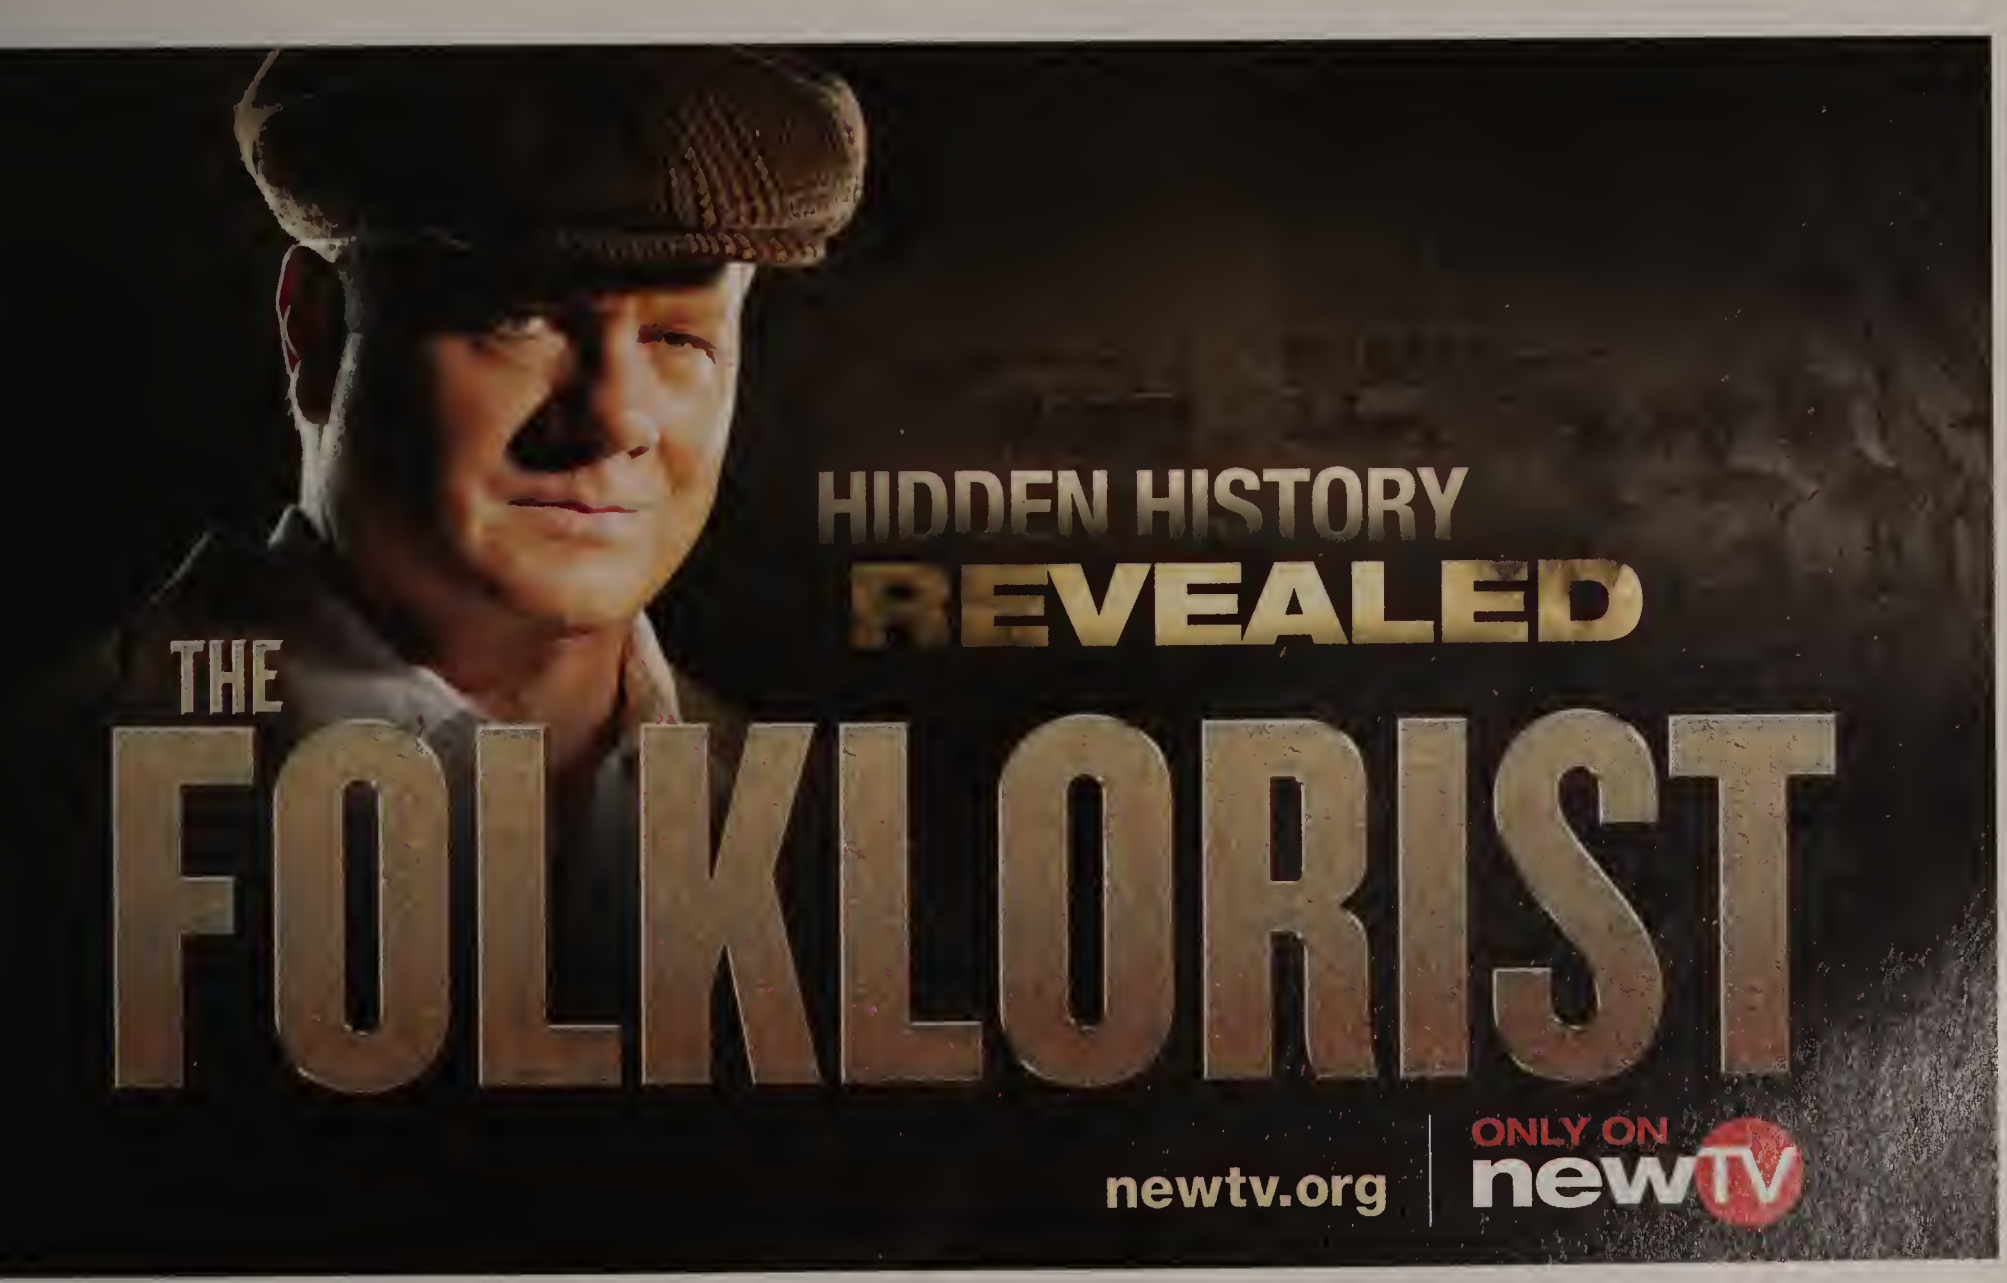
THE MIGHTY PEN

JFK'S COLLECTED CORRESPONDENCE IS COMPELLING HISTORY.

The Letters of John F. Kennedy Edited by Martin Sandler, 384 pages, $30 hardcover



A personal look into the Brookline-born president

FROM A CHARMINGLY EARNEST CHILDHOOD demand for a raise in his 40-cent allowance, to letters home from his World War II time in the Pacific, and on to the Senate and the presidency, JFK's letters possess a bracing clarity. Many are accompanied by reciprocal letters from the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan or, most sizzling, from the "bombastic and belligerent" Nikita Khrushchev. Kennedy, writing back, admonishingly assumes any "sane man" would avoid nuclear war.

It's powerful to read about such giant footfalls in history. In the stark privacy of letters, we experience the Cuban missile crisis, the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty and the civil rights movement. The dramatic tragedies in the South roused Kennedy, in forceful terms, to support racial equality, if a bit late, and respond to Alabama Gov. George Wallace's seething proclamation of his belief in segregation. When attacked by Willy Brandt about Berlin, Kennedy's response is measured and balanced, laying out possible strategies should Russia's aggressions enlarge.

One anxiously counts the months between events and letters and Kennedy's 1963 assassination. For relief, read the extraordinary poem written by a 12-year-old girl to Kennedy about Fidel Castro, or the intimate letter from a secret lover. Editor Sandler intersperses these with comments and interpretations.

FROM PAGE 237: To Khrushchev: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that you should recognize that free peoples in all parts of the world do not accept the claim of historical inevitability for Communist revolution. What your government believes is its own business; what it does in the world is the world's business. The great revolution in the history of man, past, present and future, is the revolution of those determined to be free. ◆

A SHORE THING

LOCAL CHARM AND WORLD-CLASS LUXURY AT RHODE ISLAND'S WEEKAPAUG INN

A FEW MILES WEST OF NEWPORT'S MONIED bluffs, there's a strip of low Rhode Island coast stippled with milkweed and pepperbush. Shingled mansions lean back from the barrier beaches, and autumn loons settle in the reeds to weather the Atlantic winds. This is old vacation country, drawing families since the railroads first steamed out of South Station or Grand Central. Nestling in the curl of a tidal pond, the Weekapaug Inn has sheltered summering urbanites since 1899, although you wouldn't guess it. A year after a bone-deep reconstruction that converted it into a luxury vacation spot, it's now got Frette linens, heated bathroom floors and Relais & Chateaux accreditation.

All great properties are rooted in a sense of place, and the Weekapaug is defined by its surrounding sedge, sand and inlets. After valeting your car, walk upstairs past an enormous mural showing the property's beaches and resident waterfowl, several of which make appearances in the lobby's framed Audubon prints. Along with the fizz of a welcoming glass of sparkling wine, your first impression is formed by the view over the back lawn and Quonnie Pond. Look past the swooping ospreys over the open water for a glimpse of distant Block Island—there isn't a window in the house that fails to overlook blue serenity and cormorants. Mark Bullinger, the inn's resident naturalist, leads guests on birding tours, nature walks on the beach and stargazing expeditions, or he can tailor a fishing or kayaking excursion to your taste. He'll also stop by to say hello during the evening wine-and-cheese hour and give you an update on kingfisher migrations or the visibility of constellations.

The outdoors is often best appreciated from an armchair by the fire or, better, the inside of a soaking tub. Since its renovation, the inn drastically reduced the number of rooms, making them more spacious while retaining a lot of the original furniture—reupholstered and refinished—and painting the bedroom floors per the fashion in 1899. The most majestic rooms are the four signature suites. The Green Heron Suite, for example, sports a Viking kitchen, a television den with a fireplace, a private elevator and a half-dozen comfy, aesthetic nooks suitable for recumbent bird-watching (binoculars are on the coffee table). There's even a washer and dryer for the rigors of family beach vacations. Sunrises flood the suite with color, and you can watch clammers rake the edges of the pond as you nurse a morning mug of cappuccino. More secluded are the Fenway suites in a side building overlooking the 75-foot lap pool. Adults-only, these have enclosed decks with outdoor tubs.

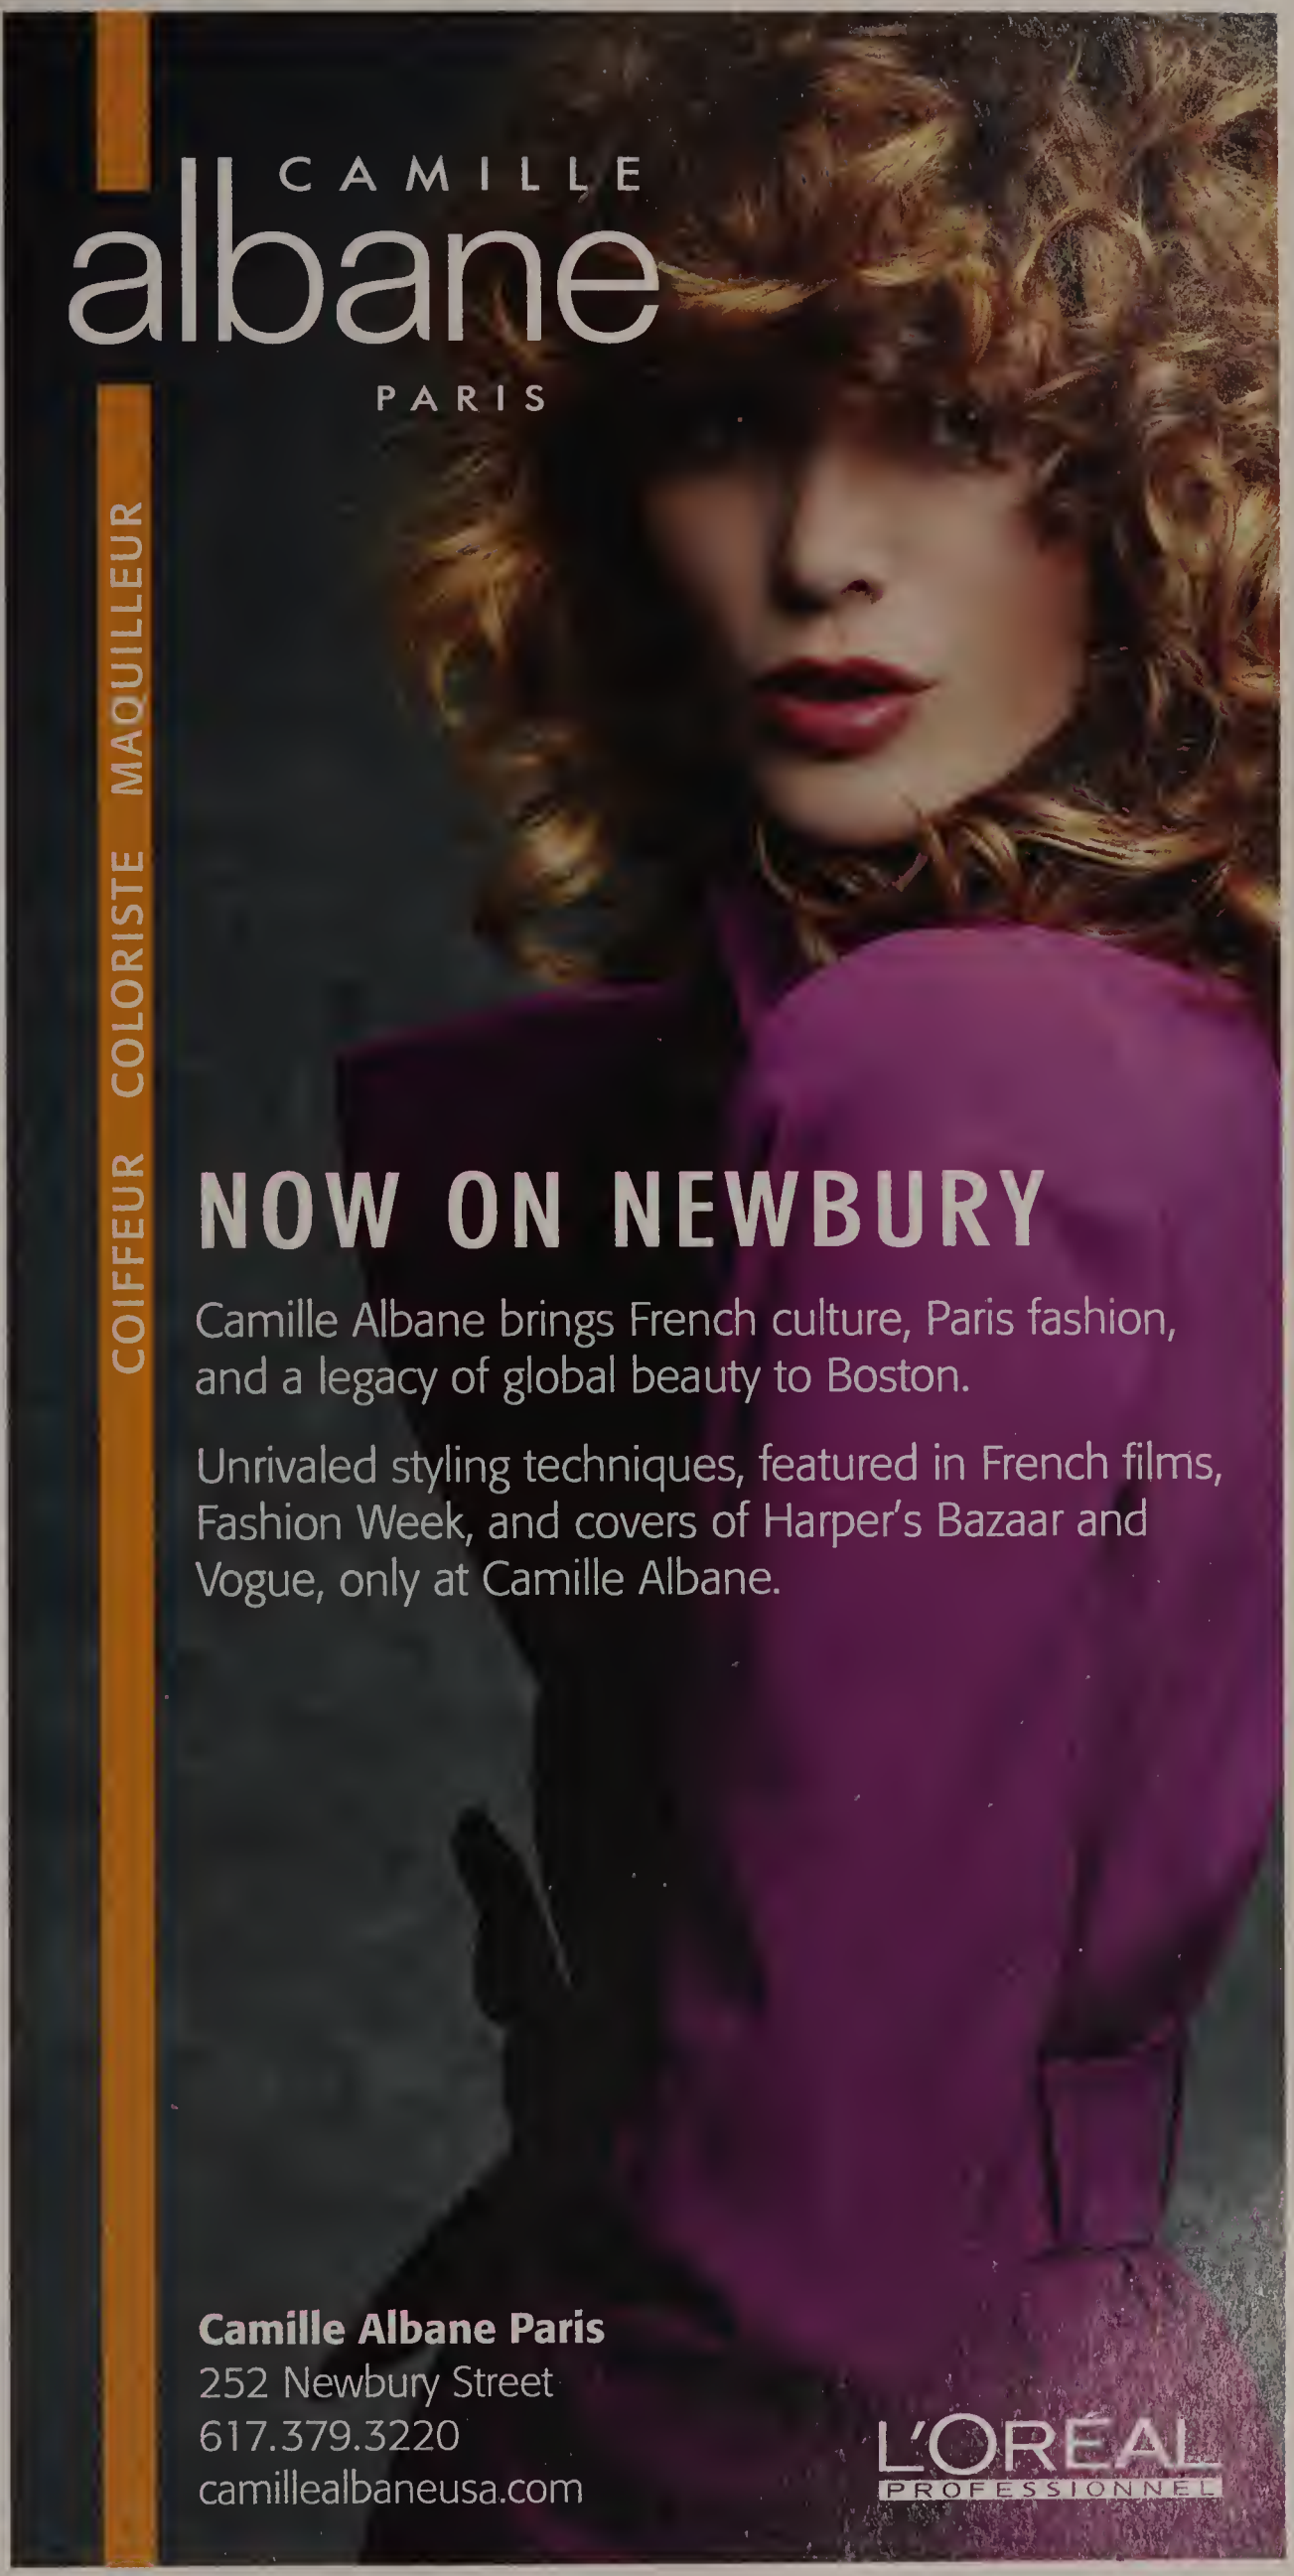
In warm weather, the two miles of private beach unroll past the Bathhouse, which features luxury changing rooms and a snack bar pouring Del's Lemonade. A boathouse supplies guests with kayaks, stand-up paddleboards and a Sunfish sailboat. For cooler afternoons, the great lawn offers two shuffleboard courts and one for bocce, while nights bring s'mores around the fire pit.



In wintry weather, though, focus your energies on the menu in chef Jennifer Backman's restaurant. Despite the well-appointed fitness room and morning yoga classes, this is a place to break diet rules, then trample the pieces, grinding them into a sweet, confectionary powder. Start with the fresh breakfast croissants that hover in a physical plane between solid pastry, air and liquid butter, but leave room for lobster hash with poached eggs. The bar is a cozy place for a beer and Point Judith calamari so tender as to mimic the texture of scallops, or just a snack of warm garlic and Parmesan potato chips. But the crowning achievement is the dinner menu. Squid ink spaghetti with clams, red chili flakes, garlic and lemon is a thoughtful exploration of textures in an umami tenor. Roast duck crackles before melting into a velvet richness uplifted by notes of beet and cherry.

Afterward, put your feet up by the fire in the main parlor while you play a board game or tinker with a jigsaw puzzle, or simply look out at the water. It's a pleasant way to spend the evening. People have been doing it here for 114 years. ◆

RIBELLE BRINGS SWOONY, INVENTIVE ITALIAN FARE TO BROOKLINE.

RIBELLE
1665 Beacon St., Brookline
ribellebkline.com

By now, few Bostonians are unaware of chef Tim Maslow's story: how he ascended the ranks of David Chang's storied Momofuku empire in Manhattan, then returned home to transform his dad's Watertown restaurant, Strip-T's, from a humble neighborhood joint into a funky, sophisticated mecca for food geeks. Ribelle represents the young star's first real startup venture in a swank space with a better in-town location. Instead of Momofuku's fierce pan-Asian or Strip-T's globe-trotting eclecticism, Ribelle uses Italian cuisine as a starting point, but simply that. There are dishes corresponding to traditional Italian antipasti, many pastas that make an obvious choice for a primo, a few meat and seafood dishes for secondi and some contorno like vegetable plates. Beyond those signposts, many diners will find themselves uncharted territory: It's not a place to bring your [illegible] loving grandma.

House-made pastas may offer the best showcase for the kitchen's guile and edginess, featuring nontraditional ingredients, high-technique preparations and lovely but not overly fussy platings reminiscent of voguish, high-end urban restaurants in Italy. Agnolotti ($17) are a two-abreast parade of barely cooked small ravioli, some filled with beef short rib, others with smoked bone marrow, their richness balanced with a sweet-tart red-wine reduction and crowned with crisp Brussels sprout leaves. Gnocchi with lobster fra diavolo ($16 half, $27 full) is built on small gnocchi of the chewier persuasion, pan-fried to golden crispness and generously topped with tail and claw meat; pretty baby beet greens and fresh tarragon offer spicy, herbal balance, but there's none of the expected chili heat. Raviolo ($23) pulls off the neat technical feat of cooking an intact egg yolk on pureed potatoes inside one large pasta envelope; its topping of diced sweet scallop and porcini completes another texturally dazzling, subtly flavored dish.

Vegetable dishes are done with high style and gorgeous ingredients: When was the last time a plate of carrots ($12) inspired "oohs" and "aahs"? Here, 2013's It Vegetable sports crazy heritage colors, crunchy hazelnuts and a vivid-yellow puree of sea buckthorn berries. Green beans ($13) are more animal than vegetable, underlaid by a beautiful slab of veal tongue, tender as foie gras but more delicately flavored, aromatically buttressed by garlic confit and lightly iodiney squid-ink crumbs. Desserts are clever, unusual, eye-catching. Corn ice cream ($7) is genuinely strange, its creme fraiche sourness pitted against sweet corn kernels, bits of apple and crumbly roasted pine nuts. Less challenging is olive oil ice cream ($7) in a hard chocolate coating: a Klondike Bar as reimagined by Thomas Keller, serious fun.

The bartenders pour exacting, original cocktails in the craft tradition of places like Drink and the Hawthorne. The Hustle and Cuss ($10) combines Cognac, rye, sherry and ristretto with honey shrub; it should be a dissonant rumble, but somehow finds harmony the way brown spirits/bitters concoctions like the Toronto do. Wines are curated by the formidable Theresa Paopao, whose by-the-glass list offers only evocative descriptions of each wine's style, not vintner or varietal. Red #3 ($14) is "a chance to taste bottle age, and learn what 'tertiary' means." This turns out to be a 2004 Caparone merlot, from California's Santa Maria Valley: big, smoky, inky and deep, like a Pétrus' backwoods cousin. The rest of her list—15 sparklers ($26-$132), a couple of dozen whites ($28-$87), a dozen rosés ($29-$76), a couple of dozen reds ($37-$82) and 14 reserve bottles ($62-$259)—leans French and Italian, but includes gems from all over the world. When you're struggling to match wines with Maslow's intricate flavor combinations, she's a tremendous asset.

Fans of Strip-T's rickety diner weirdness will marvel at the sleek, hard-edged, downtown look of Ribelle's dining room, though the well-informed, deadpan, utterly relaxed style of service will be familiar. Although early problems with heat, kitchen ventilation and timing of dishes have faded, the room remains punishingly loud. But even rock-concert noise levels won't deter a certain kind of customer from returning. With its frequently changing menu, Ribelle offers a relentless, sure-handed inventiveness that, though occasionally outré, never veers into gimmickry or pretension. In the gifted hands of Maslow and his team, Italian for Food Nerds turns out to be a fabulous, long-overdue idea. ◆

Q: ARE THERE ANTI-AGING BENEFITS TO APPLYING TOPICAL VITAMINS TO MY SKIN?

A: Environmental toxins such as sunlight, air pollution and stress cause free radical damage, which leads to wrinkles, sagging skin and discoloration. Advanced skin care products containing anti-oxidant vitamins C, E, CoQ10 and green tea, are definitely one of the best ways to protect your skin. These anti-oxidants help to neutralize free radicals that would otherwise break down your skin cells and cause noticeable aging.

However, in order to be effective, these products must be properly formulated to penetrate deeply and should contain an adequate concentration of anti-oxidants to make a noticeable difference in the health and appearance of your skin

Naturally, my favorite brand of skin care products is SkinHealth, which incorporates the essential ingredients necessary for vibrant, younger-looking skin.

12 YEARS A SLAVE ★★★★
Starring Chiwetel Ejiofor, Michael Fassbender, Lupita Nyong'o, Benedict Cumberbatch, Sarah Paulson, Paul Giamatti and Brad Pitt. Screenplay by John Ridley. Directed by Steve McQueen. At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.

Movies / Sean Burns

INFERNAL MACHINE

DIRECTOR STEVE MCQUEEN TRAINS HIS EYE ON THE SYSTEMATIC WORKINGS OF SLAVERY.

EARLY ON IN THE REMARKABLE 12 Years a Slave, there is a lingering shot of a riverboat paddle wheel churning along in the darkness. It's 1841, and Northern-born free man Solomon Northup (Chiwetel Ejiofor)—an eloquent, educated violinist—has just been drugged and kidnapped and is currently being shipped in chains to Louisiana, where he will be sold at auction. Director Steve McQueen stages these early goings-on as if helming a horror movie, a bullying bureaucratic nightmare in which your life and freedom can suddenly be stripped away from the shadows with nary a moment's notice. But then the camera stops to dwell upon that paddle wheel, as Hans Zimmer's score drones on, granting the grinding gears an ominous portent.

Welcome to the machine.

Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Northup's own 1853 memoir, 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have been movies about the horrors of slavery before. But never one about the mechanics. It is a brutal process.

Quickly, London-born installation artist turned director McQueen (I can tell you from personal experience—does not suffer fools gladly during interviews, McQueen transitioned into features with the abstract Bobby Sands biopic Hunger, followed by the hellscape sex-addiction saga Shame. Both movies starred the De Niro to his Scorsese, Michael Fassbender, who we will return to later in this review. McQueen is a conceptual thinker with little interest in conventional character arcs. He always elicits fine performances, but the actors are cogs in a larger design. The films themselves remain icy and hermetic.

This movie is brusque, unsparing and refuses to editorialize.

Such traits leave him perhaps best equipped, at the moment, to tackle America's original sin, warmed up as we were last Christmas by the silly blockbuster wish-fulfillment shenanigans of Quentin Tarantino's Django Unchained. Except you won't find any crowd-pleasing revenge fantasies, Blazing Saddles in-jokes or Jim Croce songs here. This movie is brusque, unsparing and refuses to editorialize. McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened.

Northup is transferred to the custody of a curt, dapper slave trader (Paul Giamatti, giving the opposite of what we expect from a Paul Giamatti performance) and after much negotiation is bought for a princely sum by a well-to-do gentleman who doesn't outwardly seem like such a bad guy. Played by Benedict Cumberbatch, he appears to be a decent-enough fellow who is even sometimes kind and respectful toward the purchased brown properties who toil upon his land.

But push eventually turns into shove with Paul Dano's dim-bulb overseer (is there a more punchable actor in movies today?), and Cumberbatch at last gushes forth with a line that will presumably become immortal: "You're an exceptional n-----, but I fear no good will come of it."

Troublemaking Northup is quickly sold off to Fassbender (I told you we'd get back to him), a legendary "n------breaker" who takes great pleasure in whipping any new arrival who doesn't meet his cotton quota and steals off nightly in an alcoholic stupor to rape the object of his forbidden affections, Patsey (the amazing Lupita Nyong'o).

Fassbender's performance is perhaps the broadest in the movie, but he knows what he owns and insists he's damn well entitled under the law to do whatever he pleases with all of them. The grotesquerie makes a fine counterpoint to Ejiofor's sublime understatement. Ever since Dirty Pretty Things, I've been arguing that this guy is a leading man waiting in the wings, and his emphatic eyes sell Northup's internal trauma even while he's just trying to keep his head down and stay alive.

McQueen's most harrowing shot locks in on Ejiofor's face while he stares unblinking into the camera lens. The light recedes around him, and Solomon Northup glares into our eyes for what feels like an eternity. As night falls, you watch the extinguishing of a human spirit.

Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? The movie only asks that you accept, and return his gaze. Don't look away. This all actually happened. ◆

MOOD SWINGS

FROM RAVES TO ROMANCE, CHARLOTTE AITCHISON DEVELOPS HER DANCE-POP PERSONA.

CHARLOTTE AITCHISON HAD ENVISIONED a pop music career since she was in primary school. "I knew when I saw Britney Spears on TV singing 'Hit Me, Baby, One More Time,'" the British singer says. "I was like, 'Mum, I just want to do that. That's so cool!'"

Today, Aitchison's realizing that dream under stage name Charli XCX, spinning coolly emotive dance pop that's dark and ebullient over the luscious layers of her April release True Romance. She's even cracked the mainstream with Icona Pop's double-platinum hit "I Love It" as its songwriter and featured guest.

"It's opened a lot of doors for me in the songwriting world," says Aitchison, 21, who also submitted a track to Britney Spears' next record in the wake of her Icona Pop-fueled success. "It's crazy! It's like they're doing all the work, and it's kinda paying my bills, which means I can do whatever I want."

Raised in the English county of Hertfordshire, just north of London, Aitchison has been used to doing what she wants since her mid-teens. "I didn't grow up in one of those painfully cool households where the Beatles were playing," she says. Her father loved the Monkees and '70s soft-rockers Wood, Brinton and her mother listened to the Electric Light Orchestra, a contrast from the Britney, Spice Girls and Christina Aguilera that Aitchison favored. But her dad also booked local concerts and partially funded her early recordings, which sparked attention for electro tracks "Art Bitch" and the partly rapped "!Francheskaar!" A London promoter discovered her on the Internet and booked her to play an illegal warehouse rave.

"No one was there to see music—it was to take all the drugs and get really high," says Aitchison, who shouted about dinosaur sex over the chaos of the rave scene. "Even though it was just shock value, it was interesting to be able to witness that, and it kind of helped me develop my stage performance."

Those performances landed her a record deal, although she says, "The music I was making, in hindsight, was awful, but I was 14, so I was just f---ing around." It took a few years for Charli XCX (after Aitchison's "Kiss Charli Kiss" screen name on MSN Messenger) to click with co-writers, but she finally found the right fit with Ariel Rechtshaid, then best known for the Plain White Ts' hit "Hey There Delilah."

"I didn't grow up in one of those painfully cool households where the Beatles were playing."

Rechtshaid co-wrote and produced about half of the tracks that ended up on True Romance, including the celestial glide "Nuclear Seasons" and the throbbing "Stay Away." Aitchison describes that album as a diary, mapping the extremes of her romantic history, hence its title. "It was just an emotional outlet for me so I didn't go crazy," she says. "Romance can only be true when you have both the amazing ecstasy, walking-on-clouds side of things and when you have the terrible isolation and loneliness."

Those mood swings are echoed in disparate elements from gothic synths to electro hip-hop (with crude California rapper Brooke Candy) to swirling harmonies around Charli XCX's half-spoken vocals on the Todd Rundgren-produced "So Far Away."

"The stuff I'm making now is more guitar-led and much rougher," Aitchison says from Stockholm, where she's working on a follow-up album with Patrik Berger, who produced the True Romance track "You're the One." She cites fresh inspirations from '60s French pop and new-wave bands like the Waitresses and Bow Wow Wow, a cheeky sound evidenced in the disco-y advance single "SuperLove." The song's video shows Charli XCX cavorting in a candy-stripe dress with robots in a neon-splashed Tokyo club.

An art-school dropout, Aitchison's also inspired by film and fashion, citing current favorites in Robert Palmer's "Addicted to Love" music video and Ladies and Gentlemen, the Fabulous Stains, a 1982 movie about a girl punk band (Charli XCX just drafted an all-girl band of her own, adding guitar and bass to her past live backup of keyboards and drums).

"When I'm writing my songs, I'm already thinking of the visual aspect of things," says the singer, who plays the Sinclair on Nov. 12. "If I write a song and I can't picture the music video, I know the song isn't for me." ◆

FAMILY HISTORY

THERE'S A LOT TO BE LEARNED FROM YOUR GRANDPARENTS.

MOST OF US WONDER, FROM TIME TO time, "Where did we come from? What propelled the family here? What secrets don't we know?" Sites like Aneestry.com are extremely popular. But it's the personal stories from the older generations that sing to us and teach. Not only family history, but history about the lives and times of others around them.

People love to talk about themselves and their past. Even reeluses open up like clams if you ask the right questions. And once they start, they'll just keep rolling.

My grandfather was in the hospital several times in his later years. He lived until his early 90s, a tough immigrant, full of grit. Asking him about his past made him forget any pain, forget that he was in a hospital room. He came to this country in 1893, and he told me, "The biggest difference between Europe and America, and it amazed me when it first happened, is that in Americe, when you got in a fight, the other guy always let you up."

He talked to me often about his early days in Americe. "As a greenhorn kid," he said, "full of wonder, I understood fast that you had to stick up for your rights. You couldn't let yourself be pushed around. That's why my father left Europe. He was a buteher. He could do nothing against the soldiers who would come into our little town, burn houses, stick swords into our beds, into our clothing, looking for money, jewelry, anything of value. In America, I got into lots of fights. You had to fight because everything was centered on the corner where you'd hang out with your friends. My great-grandchildren watch television. They have everything, and they complain to me sometimes about having nothing to do. Boredom and self-pity are the two elements that will kill you faster than any disease. You'll be dead between the ears."

Grandpa spent most of his childhood on the streets of the North End. He and his friends rolled hoops on Boston Common, spun tops on the sidewalks, swam in the Charles River. "All of our entertainment was outside the home," he told me. "Fruit and vegetable men would peddle their produce from carts. We would steal ice from the milk cart, and the milkman would chase us through alleys, over fences. He didn't care whether the milk soured or not. Our year was spent in contests: jumping, running, baseball, swimming, sneaking into burlesque shows. The show cost 10 cents for the gallery, but a dozen of us would come in and individually march by the ticket taker, telling him the next guy would pay for all. The last kid would pay a dime, but by then we would be all over the theater. At the burlesque it wasn't just stripping. It was variety shows, vaudeville. There I saw Gentleman Jim Corbett, who was the heavyweight champion. He would do a routine, punch a bag, jump rope, demonstrate his famous solar plexus punch."

PITCHING HISTORY: The author's grandfather had a nasty curveball and a knack for storytelling.

My grandfather told me the story of when, in 1904, someone built a gym in the North End, a few blocks from his house. "It changed the life of the gang on the corner, because it meant we had a place to play inside all winter. And it was also a place to bathe. We all lived in apartment houses. My home was a four-room flat. My mother, my father and I lived with my three brothers and sisters. There was one bathroom, and we all washed ourselves in the sink. We had a bathtub, but that was where we stored coal for our stove."

Sports were central to life then. "We all played everything there was to play. I was a catcher. Our team was 'The Hemlocks,' from the West End, and we played every town or regional team around Boston. I boxed professionally also, at 130 pounds, on barges in the Charles River and in clubs in Cambridge, Boston and Providence. That's what the gym taught me. For $15 a fight I'd go up against all the tough little guys who grew up just like me, whether they were Jewish, Italian or Irish."

All this activity was, of course, in their spare time. "All the kids worked. I was a delivery boy for the butcher, a paperboy. I carried ice. I was an usher. Six days a week, after school and on Saturdays. It was life. When I was getting married, my wife made me stop fighting. It was marriage or boxing. I got married. But I never gave up the love of sports."

He told me that two years after his wedding, in 1912, he was walking to the store to buy milk and bread when he, on impulse, joined in a 15-mile walking race. "Walking was a big event then, the shuffling fast heal-and-toe event. I took off my hat, tie and jacket and entered the race. It was 15 miles, up Commonwealth Avenue and back to the starting point. In my street shoes, out of 70 participants, I finished third."

"Remember," he said to me, "one finger for a fastball, two for a curve."

My grandfather used to play catch with me until he was in his late 80s. He had a battered catcher's mitt from the 1920s that he would take every spring to the Boston Braves spring training in Florida, where he'd pester the players to throw to him. After the Braves left for Milwaukee, he would take his glove and follow the Red Sox to Sarasota. He always threw a heavy ball and always aimed to hit me in the chest with his throw. The last time we played he could still throw a bigger curve than I could ever manage in my life.

The last time I saw him in the hospital, as I left, he flashed one finger at me, then two. "What's that?" I asked him.

"Remember," he said to me, "one finger for a fastball, two for a curve."

I loved my grandfather, and his stories brought history to life. They gave me many lessons, the biggest of which was that we didn't just spring into our father's and mother's lives as a blank. We all have a rich history in tales of where we came from. And our forebears had triumphs and joy and sadness, just like us.

Pay attention to these old people. They can help us stay young. ◆

HARD TO STOMACH

MY YEAR OF BEEFCAKEDNESS

COOKED! It turns out getting fit is not as easy as pie

EARLIER THIS YEAR, I EMBARKED ON Equinox gym's Tier 4 program, which is designed to customize your workout and nutrition routine using reams of biometric data and stone-cold science. After measuring my surprisingly robust metabolism and cardio efficiency, Equinox prescribed brutal workouts combined with a whole pile of calories—typically 3,000 to 3,500 per day. My wife, Heather, predicted that this level of gluttony would make me fat. I said it would make me strong. It turns out we were both right.

I reached my apex of brawniness sometime around May, when I crested 200 pounds. I've never weighed 200 pounds, but I was full of energy and stronger than I'd ever been. Food, glorious food! At one point last spring, a drunk chick at a bar grabbed my arm and declared, "You have nice muscles." If I were Equinox, I'd put that on the brochures.

My workouts changed just as much as my diet. Instead of plodding along for three miles at a constant pace and going through the motions with weights, I embraced the concepts of circuit training for weights and intervals for cardio. Both are predicated on the idea that workouts are not activities that you can accomplish while tweeting about twerking. In fact, working out should always make you feel like you're about to throw up and die. Maybe leave that off the brochures.

They say life is short, but try interval training and you'll find out how long a minute can take. The idea is that you intersperse your sprightly jogging with one-minute sprints. Inevitably I'd look at the clock during an interval, thinking I'd gone past the minute mark, only to discover I was at 36 seconds. I had to stop running with my dogs, because once the intervals started, they'd both tug back on their leashes as if to say, "What's wrong with you? Settle down over there, Usain Bolt."

But as my muscles expanded, fueled by double breakfasts and constant snacks, my midriff spare tire also grew from a modest space saver to a serious full-size BF Goodrich. The Equinox trainers warned me this would happen as my body acclimated to its new calorie load. They asserted that if I stayed the course, eventually the ancient lizard creature running my metabolism would realize that we're not starving and stop hoarding fat. I had the patience to see that process through, no matter how many delicious breakfast burritos it took. Heather, however, did not.

Sometime last summer, she announced, "I veto this program. You're on my program now." By then I'd arrived at what I would describe as bouncer physique, attaining the novel result of looking better with clothes on and worse with them off. Perhaps the fat-guy-with-hot-skinny-wife dynamic works on sitcoms, but in real life it charts you on a path for divorce. If you're wondering what Heather's program entails, it's a lot like Equinox's except without the fun part where you eat a lot.

I meant to go back to Equinox and revisit their battery of tests before switching strategies. But before I could do that, or even really try Heather's approach, I embarked on an unplanned month of horrible behavior. I was traveling for work, and then I was on vacation; then I got a gnarly chest cold. From late July to late August, I didn't exercise or pay particular attention to what I was eating. And over that month, a strange thing happened: I got skinny, dropping about 15 pounds from my pinnacle of beefcakedness. The crooked rib on my right side, broken in a high-school ATV accident, reappeared like the groundhog after a long winter. Hello, old deformity! I didn't realize I missed you.

Ironically, this return to relative skinniness gave me more empathy for fat people. Not because I was one, but because my journey to pumptitude and back shows how hard it is to change your body—you can bust your ass for six months, but one month of backsliding and your genetic programming takes over and sends you back where you started. The fact that I lost weight after a month spent wallowing in debauchery is the luck of the draw, my body regressing to its norm. Maybe there's a brand of fatalism in that, but also a kind of relief in knowing that you can only move the chains so far.

As I write this, my strongman gut is gone, along with the muscles. It's like I had a dream that I was a thick-necked fellow who could throw two plates on each side of the bench-press bar. Yet ultimately, I wasn't committed enough to find out whether my Tier 4 muscles would evaporate my Tier 4 gut. I still think Equinox has a very cool program, but I just don't have the stomach for it. ◆

GREAT CREDITS

THE BREAKING BAD AND MICHAEL J. FOX SHOW STAR TALKS ABOUT HER BIG ROLES.

ACTRESS BETSY BRANDT, 36, IS CURRENTLY STARRING on the NBC comedy The Michael J. Fox Show, but she's best known for her portrayal of Marie Schrader on Breaking Bad. Her other TV credits include Private Practice, Boston Legal, CSI, NCIS, Parenthood, ER and Without a Trace. Born and raised in Bay City, Mich., she earned a bachelor's degree in acting from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign before studying theater with the Moscow Art Theater School at Harvard University and the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama. Her numerous stage credits include Next Fall at L.A.'s Geffen Playhouse and Thirst at the American Conservatory Theatre, while film credits include Magic Mike. She lives in New York with her husband and two children.

JONATHAN SOROFF: How does it feel to go from one hit show to another?
BETSY BRANDT: I always repeat the old joke: How do you get an actor to complain? Give him a job.

Are you still upset about the end of Breaking Bad? I'm somewhere in the five stages of grief. I don't know them sequentially, but I'm no longer in denial and haven't quite reached acceptance. This could go on for years.

What's it like to have been part of the biggest TV show in history? Wow. I will say this: I woke up Monday morning after the series finale on Sunday, and I was thankful that I had a great job to go to. Honestly, I otherwise might have been pushed over the edge.

What was the point during the whole series when you said, "This is huge." When I read the pilot, I thought it was the best pilot I'd ever read. But the first three seasons... We had this fantastic show that was just for a select few. Then it got the credit that it was due. But at first, it was just sort of private. And then it was amazing to me the way it blew up. That only happens once in a... well, never.

What's harder for you to do: comedy or drama? Depends on when you ask me. Last night, I would have said comedy. But if you're tired, for instance, you can use that in drama, but you kind of have to rise above it doing comedy.

Is Michael J. Fox one of the cleverest people you've ever met? He's freakishly smart and funny. I'm so crazy about him, as are the entire cast and crew.

Did you study his real-life wife, Tracy Pollan? Not really. There are definitely things from their life in the show, but he's not playing himself. She's so fabulous, I just don't need the pressure. She's a trifecta. She's funny. She's gorgeous. She's pretty much perfect.

What's the most important thing you learned at Harvard? Harvard has such a small-town feel, but you have access to the most amazing things. Y'know, Anna Deavere Smith is here Tuesday night; let's go see her. But it was very much about respect for your craft.

What was the hardest part of filming a TV show while you were pregnant? Well, it was really uncomfortable. But probably the hardest part was trying to plan around something where none of us knew when it was going to happen. They always had backup scripts in case I couldn't be in the scene.

So when did the baby come? I can tell you exactly. We were filming season two, episode 10. There's a scene by the swimming pool where Walt Jr. gets drunk at the Whites' pool, and Walt and Hank have a fight. It was supposed to be Walt and Marie, but I was having a baby when they filmed that.

So why didn't you name your kid Season Two, Episode 10? What a missed opportunity. S2, Epi-10 has such a nice ring to it. We actually do call our son our Little Tamale, because he was born in New Mexico.

Weirdest thing you ever read about yourself either online or in a tabloid? There was an article in The Enquirer about how Tracy Pollan and I are cat-fighting over Michael J. Fox. It was so funny my stomach hurt I laughed so hard. But I remember Bryan Cranston saying, "Our show is too clean. There's no rumors about us. Nothing. We need some dirt. They should be saying, 'If it moves, Cranston bangs it.'" [Laughs] I was like, "We have less than a million viewers. No one cares."

"We really did need to keep track of drug trafficking in the area, because it's a problem there."

Is your real husband jealous of Michael J. Fox? [Laughs] No, because I've been doing this a long time. But when we were preparing the pilot, my husband asked, "How did it go? How was Michael J. Fox?" I said, "He's great. He's awesome. He makes you look like a douchebag. But don't worry. He makes me and everyone else on the planet look like a douchebag, too. We're all in the same boat."

Did you have lots of strange fan encounters? Of course. But mostly the meth addicts were normal, because for them, it was somewhat cathartic. In the beginning, there were all these people saying, "You're glamorizing meth!" and I was like, "What part of this looks glamorous to you?"

Do your work and real life overlap much? Not really. Although when we were doing Breaking Bad, we really did need to keep track of drug trafficking in the area, because it's a problem there, so there are some eerie parallels sometimes.

For Magic Mike, did you go to male strip clubs to research? What a tough job. Can you believe what I have to put up with? Working with Channing Tatum?

Would you give him a loan in real life? Oh, I was like, "Soderbergh, Schmoderbergh, I'll give you that money." [Laughing] I also actually said to him, "I know you're scantily clad in a lot of your scenes but not in this one. If you need to take your clothes off, please. Who am I to stand in the way of another actor's process? You do what you need to do. This is a safe place."

What would you tell your past self if you could go back? A) That you'll become an actor who's making a living at it. B) You'll live and work in L.A. C) You'll be working with Alex Keaton from Family Ties.

YOUR SENSES

The Greek philosopher Epicurus wrote, "I don't know how I should conceive of the good if I take away the pleasures of taste, if I take away sexual pleasure, if I take away the pleasure of hearing, and if I take away the sweet emotions that are caused by the sight of beautiful forms."

This from a man who lived in a cheap commune on a diet of cabbage and water, finding joy in simplicity, in the pleasures of the mind and spirit. But the quote makes us itch for a rare steak and rarer vintage cabernet, for the full indulgence of the senses. Here are some beautiful ways to do that.

When Prometheus gave humans the gift of fire, he probably didn't expect that we'd turn a primal necessity into an incendiary indulgence.

From November to March, Taj Boston offers a complimentary fireplace butler service: Guests can choose from a firewood menu of birch, cherry, oak, maple or the Taj Blend, all of which are locally sourced. The hotel's 11 fireplace butlers are available day or night to light the fire and explain the kindling properties, fragrance and color of each timber's flame.

"If a guest wants a faster burning, birch is nice for a before-dinner cocktail, or a quiet moment before heading out for the evening," says Maureen Albright, director of engineering at Taj Boston. "Maple is a more relaxing, slower-burning fire. It has a sweet aroma that speaks to a true New England winter." Birch and maple are the most requested on the menu, while cherry, which adds a wider range of hues to the fire, and oak, which has a lighter scent, are both meant for those looking to burn the midnight oil.

The firewood service is an added amenity during a stay in Taj's Executive, Park View and Luxury Park View suites. With a butler always ready to reignite the flames, fire is much easier to maintain than it was while rubbing twigs together in your Cub Scout uniform. And if you're looking for a summer-camp atmosphere, s'mores are available by request.

The collection at the Museum of Fine Arts includes nearly 450,000 individual artworks.

Even if you wanted to lay eyes on all the pieces on display during the museum's visiting hours, it's impossible to do it in one trip. And while you can always follow one of the museum's useful guides, these aren't tailored to personal taste, so you might end up hearing about the jewelry collection for an hour when you really just wanted a quick fix of Egyptian mummies.

What's an art lover to do? For its biggest donors ($50,000 and higher), the MFA staff and curators will tailor a behind-the-scenes tour to the patron's preferences. Fans of John Singer Sargent could learn more about him on a private tour of the John Singer Sargent Watercolors exhibit, followed by a viewing of his other works in the MFA's collections, including The Daughters of Edward Darley Boit, and capped off by a look at his murals in the museum's Sargent Rotunda.

For philanthropic families who want to give their kids exposure to the finer things, the whole clan can embark on an experience that includes hands-on painting or sculpture activities. After indulging in the customized tour, you could sit down for further conversation with a curator and a meal complementing your artistic themes at the upstairs Bravo restaurant. Nor is the MFA the only museum that arranges customized private tours. The ICA also offers a similar plan (a tour for you and 19 of your friends) for its biggest donors. The only thing more visually impressive than the sight of Boston's finest art collections is the sight of Boston's finest art collections without the crowds.

The first joy of walking into the oenomanic restaurant Meritage comes not from some aromatic gust of pinot or sizzled pig, but from the windows.

They show a kestrel's view of Boston Harbor, a seascape in diamond, periwinkle and ultramarine, a living IMAX screen. It's hard to take your eyes from the glitter and $100 million yachts. At least, until your other senses blaze awake at the contents of your glass and plate.

Chef Daniel Bruce has built his reputation on creating dishes that harmonize with particular wines. Wine is the departure point, so to experience his concepts fully, you need to taste their pairings, and vice versa. Taken together, this menu puts the gustatory system through its full paces, from walk to canter to breakneck gallop with a tenderloin in horseradish sauce.

Begin with pan-roasted Atlantic swordfish steaks in riesling, lemongrass, ginger, carrot and coconut broth, paired with 2007 S.A. Prum Wehlener Sonnenuhr. "The swordfish takes a Far East approach, and the riesling's mouthfeel holds up to Asian flavors," Bruce says. It's silky, desert dry and suggests that the wine's birthplace in the Mosel Valley must smell heavenly. "Sommeliers love these wines because of the eyelid-peeling acid," remarks wine director Nicholas Daddona.

Next is lemony Jonah crab cakes with a 2012 Frog's Leap sauvignon blanc. Paralleling the delicate fish, the wine's light on its feet, with acid and fruit, and what Daddona calls the mossy smell of "river stone." Then comes a cream of wild mushroom soup with 1990 Picrre Morey Batard-Montrachet Grand Cru. This combination is liquid velvet, even gold. It evokes sunlight shooting through the cool shadows on a forest walk, with the earth of the mushrooms bringing out the Burgundy's terroir. It's taste as memory.

A dish of Parmesan cheese gnocchi with 2011 Elk Cove pinot noir contrasts the salty cheese with the freshness of garden peas and the wild strawberry notes of the pinot, while Chinese five-spice braised beef short ribs with 2005 Cain Five Spring Mountain Meritage plunges deep into black fruit and a long, rich mouthfeel. Lastly, a grilled prime filet with horseradish and red wine syrup pairs with 2006 Shafer Vineyards Hillside Select. The big blackcurrant and cassis flavors of the wine yield to the spicy horseradish, the unctuous cream and beef. It's a pairing that's less chamber piece than symphonic.

The recipes for all these dishes are in Chef Daniel Bruce's new cookbook, Simply New England (Lyons Press). Or you can try the filet recipe available on our website, improper.com.

A night at Symphony Hall, with its incomparable acoustics and world-class performers, is a luxurious experience in its own right. But Boston Symphony Orchestra donors can really face the music.

At the Fiedler Society Maestro level, patrons have the opportunity to take center stage during a concert as they conduct John Philip Sousa's utterly patriotic "The Stars and Stripes Forever," a fixture in the Boston Pops Fireworks Spectacular, or holiday favorite "Sleigh Ride." After a short rehearsal with a conductor, you can briefly occupy the space where Seiji Ozawa and Serge Koussevitzky once did as you take the stand with nearly 100 members of the orchestra awaiting your lead and 2,625 audience members waiting for you to make a mistake.

For those with stage fright (and deeper pockets), an exclusive musical excursion awaits. Past tours have included the cymbal manufacturer Zildjian's Massachusetts headquarters, the Steinway piano factory and locations near and dear to BSO founder Henry Lee Higginson. Peter Fiedler, son of Arthur Fiedler, who helmed the post as the Pops' conductor for half a century, led an outing for classical music aficionados that highlighted the longtime maestro's Brookline home, the Boston Fire Museum, which now hosts part of his personal collection of firefighter memorabilia, and the Orpheum Theatre, formerly Boston Music Hall and the first home to the orchestra.

Or to make an event all your own, you can rent Symphony Hall for an evening. The seven hours come complete with catering, decor, flowers, lighting and a production team, so that guests can stage a concert, a wedding or even a squash match

TOUCH}

There's nothing quite like the feel of a garment tailored to your frame and taste—and made-to-measure fashion no longer requires a Paris couturier on call.

Local ventures 9tailors and Blank Label offer bespoke dress shirts starting at under $80; Boston-founded e-tailer Bow & Drape takes a similar tack with womenswear, offering 15 silhouettes with countless combos of hems, sleeves, necklines and fabrics, priced in the low hundreds. Such upstarts rely on a range of methods to achieve the right fit: questionnaires, home-fit kits, consultations in showrooms real and virtual. Alton Lane, a young New York-based custom menswear company that opened a clubby, leather-appointed showroom on Newbury last year, even boasts a 360-degree body scanner.

Gregory Paul Hugill takes a more old-school approach to tailoring. The 2011 Lasell College graduate launched his namesake label, Gregory Paul, earlier this year, offering both ready-to-wear and "demicouture"—designs meant to bridge the gap between off-the-rack and totally customized couture. "Since I can remember, it's the only thing I really ever wanted to do," he says. "It started out with drawing and doodling as a young kid.... I have stacks and stacks of books that people aren't allowed to see anymore because it's so humiliatingly embarrassing—stick figures with little drawings on them, in order to try to get some idea out."

His finished designs are a world away from those rough sketches. Drawn to a restrained but rich color palette and luxe fabrics like lambskin and cashmere, he aims for clean lines and feminine elegance. "I want to take things that people have looked to as iconic styles, a lot of those 1940s-1960s styles, and then twist them," he says. It's an aesthetic that's attracted clients like social-scene fixtures Ashley Bernon and Laura Baldini. The process starts with a dozen or more measurements and a consultation in the client's home or his South End production studio. "We talk about what they already have in their wardrobe, what they do on a day-to-day basis, the kind of things that they want to see improved upon," Hugill explains. The client weighs in on several resulting sketches, and follow-up fittings ensure her new demicouture complements every curve.

Going Once, Going Twice,

SOLD

By Jonathan Soroff

The rich don't like to pay retail any more than you do. That's why most of the major trappings of wealth—old masters, fine furniture, jewelry, rare wines—often trade hands at auction.

While names like Christie's and Sotheby's might command more recognition, in Boston, "auction house" is synonymous with Skinner. The venerable firm is headquartered in Marlborough, but might be more familiar from its Park Plaza showroom. Or more likely, from its experts' regular appearances on WGBH-TV's Antiques Roadshow. For more than four decades, Skinner has set record prices for works like a Luminist seascape, folk-art portraiture and Kashmiri textiles. They hold roughly one auction per week during their busy season, focusing on dozens of areas of expertise that range from "Clocks, Watches and Scientific Instruments" and "Historic Arms and Militaria" to "Fine Jewelry" and "20th Century Design." It's a grueling, unforgiving schedule, akin to a car dealership trying to sell its entire inventory every other day or so, and the planning and logistics involved are staggering.

TOP A 19th-century portrait that captivated bidders
BOTTOM Skinner's Park Plaza location

"There are a lot of moving parts," says Skinner managing director Marie Keep. She speaks with characteristic understatement. The process by which they get from finding that little old lady who wants to unload her Duncan Phyfe dining room table to the three-ring circus of a daylong sale that can include as many as 700 lots is as fascinating as the end result. Forget the cliched scene familiar from countless films. The reality is vastly different, but no less dramatic.

Skinner typically holds three major auctions of American Furniture and Decorative Arts per year, and with Keep's help, we traced the October sale from start to finish.

Obviously, before an auction is held, the items have to be assembled. This is probably the most alchemical aspect of the process, relying on a combination of longstanding relationships, timing, market trends, numerous other variables and no small measure of luck.

"The consignor may be a collector whose taste has changed, someone who needs money, someone who bought something as an investment and thinks now is the time to sell, someone who's downsizing or even an institution looking to raise funds," Keep says. "Their reasons are as varied as you can imagine."

Skinner's experts crisscross the country (and sometimes the globe), massaging relationships, cultivating new contacts and otherwise trying to sniff out the goods, like 19th-century explorers looking for the headwaters of the Nile River and never knowing where each little tributary might lead them. The centerpiece of the October sale, for instance, was an important collection of folk art owned by a couple in Ohio. However, 617 of the 657 lots came from other various, and far-flung, sources.

"This is a business built largely upon relationships," Keep says. "We work on behalf of the consignor, so our interests are aligned with theirs, but both consignors and buyers need to trust our scholarship and thoroughness."

Most of Skinner's experts have some general knowledge, so that although their specialty might be musical instruments, they all have an eye for exceptional things. As a result, a visit from a tribal art specialist might yield something for the next silver sale, while an inquiry about selling a ceramic piece might end with the person choosing to consign a rare book. The one constant is that the experts judge the piece on criteria that include provenance (the history of its source and ownership), maker, craftsmanship, age, rarity and condition (although an item with a noticeable patina or in a mild state of disrepair can often fetch a higher price than something that has been drastically restored or meticulously polished).

Once the items are under agreement, the race is on, and the first order of business is for Skinner to collect everything. This herculean task falls to Eric Jones, head of transportation. It's difficult enough to gather a 17th-century sampler from Albuquerque, N.M., a Chippendale chest from Walla Walla, Wash., and a set of brass andirons from Toad Suck, Ark. Factor in considerations like the cost of fuel and the need to protect fragile and pricey items, and your profit margin hangs in the balance.

"It's a very sophisticated system," Keep explains. "Our packers are obviously adept at dealing with delicate and valuable objects, but they also have to interact with the seller, so there's a level of tact and diplomacy involved."

Essentially, Jones and his team act like air-traffic controllers to ensure the safe arrival of valuable objects, and although they're geniuses at playing Tetris to maximize cargo space, they occasionally have to single out an item for VIP treatment.

"If there's an extraordinary piece, something that we really want to promote for the sale, we'll have it shipped directly," Keep says, "so that we have the time to get it into The New York Times, for example."

While the pieces are en route to Skinner's roughly 70,000-square-foot warehouse in Marlborough, the experts start to work on the most important aspect of the auction: the catalogue.

Cataloguing is a painstaking process that has to be completed thoroughly, despite frequent time constraints. It includes extensive research for corroborating sources and materials. It's the Hardy Boys/Nancy Drew part of the job, although prosaic details like size, types of material, damages, repairs and every other mundane detail must be included to ensure the utmost accuracy.

For the October sale, for instance, lot No. 251 was a painting of a clipper ship captained by Stephen C. Sprague, while lot No. 252 was a sea chest with "S.C. Sprague" painted on the inside cover. There were indications that the chest had sailed aboard the boat, and the Skinner crew found a 1970 article from The Patriot Ledger that bolstered the claim.

Despite a palpable hum of anticipation in the air, the most remarkable thing about the auction was the periods of inactivity suddenly interrupted by a flurry of excitement.

Still, wording is crucial, and Skinner is extremely precise in its use of terms like "school of," "manner of" and "attributed to," so that a buyer can never accuse the auctioneer of misrepresentation.

"If attribution is questioned, negotiation with the buyer has to take place," Keep says. Obviously, Skinner does everything in its power to avoid such contretemps.

Next, the items are photographed. Skinner maintains two state-of-the-art photography studios in Marlborough, manned by two full-time photographers. The department heads and specialists, meanwhile, are busy contacting potential bidders, promoting items through the appropriate channels and emailing information to a targeted list of buyers.

"Everyone is running at breakneck speed," Keep says. "From the time the catalogue goes to press, it's about a week before it's in collectors' mailboxes. And then the phones light up."

Most of Skinner's auctions take place in the showroom (except when oversized items make it impractical), so the contents of the auction are shipped to Boston, where auction coordinators Jessica Lincoln and Ben Evans serve as de facto stylists and interior designers.

"They try to set up items so that buyers can picture them in their homes," Keep says. "There's a lot of artistry to it. Lighting is very important."

Once the auction is staged, the bidders, like sharks, start to circle, with potential buyers either making special arrangements to view the objects or attending one of the public previews.

"We encourage them to handle items and look them over thoroughly," Keep explains. "This isn't a museum. Nothing can replace seeing and handling an object in person, and we don't want anyone to suffer buyer's remorse."

And then, finally... it's auction time.

The October sale began on a crisp Sunday morning and ran throughout the day, with buyers and sellers coming and going depending upon which lots captured their interest. The audience was an eclectic assortment of collectors, institutions, agents for both and dealers—dressed in everything from crisp business attire to weekend-morning casual, ranging in age from a 20-something college student to a 70-something gay couple. Many of them had Post-it notes marking the pages of their catalogues. Meanwhile, Skinner employees manned a bank of telephones and computers to take remote bids.

Despite a palpable hum of anticipation in the air, the most remarkable thing about the auction was the periods of inactivity suddenly interrupted by a flurry of excitement. One moment, a woman in the row behind me was fiddling around on her phone while the man across the aisle read the newspaper. The next moment, a three-way bidding war was taking place between two people in the room and someone bidding online.

In this sense, auctions are a lot like fishing: Not much seems to happen, despite a steady undercurrent of expectation, and then, suddenly, someone's on the hook.

Take lot No. 126, for instance: a 19th-century portrait of a young girl with her dog. Similar pieces had inspired only ho-hum bidding, and some had even been passed on entirely. The appraisal was $30,000-$50,000, and when no one opened at the estimate, it dropped down to the reserve price. And then something intangible happened. Within moments, the bids had soared past $30,000, then $100,000. The air became electric as the price kept climbing higher. Everyone was paying attention. The auctioneer looked like a spectator at a tennis match, his head bouncing between a live bidder and the bank of telephones.

When the gavel finally came down, the painting, which seemed no more remarkable than a hundred others in the sale, went for $252,000 to the person bidding by phone.

The auction continued in this vein, throughout the day, with stretches of lassitude punctuated by adrenaline-pumping excitement. But what's truly amazing is that by the next weekend, Skinner was all set up, ready to do it all over again.

Empty Space

ABSENCE MAKES THE heart grow fonder and, with Sophie Calle's Last Seen exhibit, the artist ponder. In 1991, when the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum was still reeling from the 1990 theft of 13 prized works, the photographer documented the loss. Her images of the empty spaces, paired with excerpts from interviews with museum staff, recall the emotions felt when gazing at paintings like Vermeer's The Concert and Rembrandt's A Lady and Gentleman in Black. After the frames, which were discarded by the thieves, were reinstalled, Calle returned in 2012 to once again have people share their memories and reactions. Displayed in adjoining rooms, the two series show that the pieces may be missing, but art patrons are certainly not lost for words. / Jemma Douglas

FRAYED FAMILY TIES

Almost no one will claim to have a normal family, but absolutely no one knows dysfunction as well as the Tenenbaums. Gene Hackman earned a Golden Globe for his role as a patriarch who fabricates a case of terminal cancer in order to get back in touch with his estranged family of weary former child prodigies. From the idiosyncratic mind of director/writer Wes Anderson, The Royal Tenenbaums, a 2001 Oscar nominee for Best Original Screenplay, is a depressive comedy with an acclaimed cast ranging from seasoned veterans Danny Glover and Bill Murray to younger stars Gwyneth Paltrow, Ben Stiller, Luke Wilson and co-writer Owen Wilson. Meet this bizarre bunch at the latest installment of Big Screen Classics on Nov. 18 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Daniel G. Petersen

Reviews by Sean Burns

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission. Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

A.C.O.D. ★ ½ One of those weird, no-budget comedies full of the director's famous friends, this peculiar, sodden misfire stars Parks and Recreation's Adam Scott as a fussy, neurotic 30-something attempting to keep his spiteful parents (Richard Jenkins and Catherine O'Hara) apart while planning the wedding of his younger brother. Amy Poehler stomps through scenes as a trophy wife looking for something to play with, while Scott fumbles with commitment, discovering far too late for plausibility's sake that his awful childhood became a best-seller written by his therapist (Jane Lynch). Yes, it's another movie where Jane Lynch plays a therapist. In this low-aiming Sundance film, we're supposed to cheer on Scott because he can't quite make himself settle down with Mary Elizabeth Winstead and secretly wants to cheat with Jessica Alba. Director Stu Zicherman pads out the ending with testimonials from adult children of divorce (hence the title) blabbing about their childhoods, as if that would lend this nonsense credibility. Adam Scott is very funny on television, but can't carry a movie. (At Kendall Square.)

All Is Lost ★★★★ Breathtaking in its simplicity, this riveting tale of survival at sea stars Robert Redford, a leaky boat...and that's pretty much that. Conveniently rebuking the banal Screenwriting 101 character notes and clunky symbolism that dragged Gravity down to Earth, writer-director J.C. Chandor's sophomore effort stars Redford as a nameless sailor, alone on the Indian Ocean when his yacht is struck by a stray storage container. What follows is wordless problem-solving with endless resourcefulness, as things rapidly proceed from bad to worse. The 77-year-old Sundance kid delivers a performance of expert physicality, devoid of dialogue save for a couple of SOS calls and one marvelously cathartic expletive. Redford brings his five decades of stardom to the fore. He's so magnetic, yet at times shockingly frail, you can't take your eyes off him. Chandor's unfussy direction remains focused on the tasks at hand, allowing viewers space to forge their own allegorical interpretations. Alternating between white-knuckle suspense and ghostly contemplation, All Is Lost is a spellbinding exercise in pure cinema. (At Coolidge Corner Theatre and West Newton Cinema.)

Blue Is the Warmest Color ★★★★ First love's seismic qualities have seldom been captured with such immersive abandon as in Abdellatif Kechiche's Cannes Film Festival Palme D'Or winner, a 179-minute sprawl of heartbreak shot on a vast, widescreen panorama that scarcely strays six inches from a young woman's face. Blue Is the Warmest Color charts the ardent sexual awakening and eventual crushing despair of Adèle (Adèle Exarchopoulos). She's a book-smart working-class teenager who can already tell things aren't clicking with her boyfriend, when one day she's gobsmacked by the sight of butch, blue-haired Emma (Léa Seydoux). What follows is a rapturous exploration, rendered in giddy, almost impossibly shallow-focus close-ups that make the rest of the world go away, plus a few super-heroic sex scenes. Exarchopoulos' performance is something of a miracle, with every raw, unfiltered feeling rippling across that yearning, expressive face. Kechiche's camera never flinches, filming a fairly familiar coming-of-age tale as if through a microscope, the proximity pumping up emotions to a point where everything feels like it's happening for the very first time. (At Kendall Square Cinema.)

Blue Jasmine ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature has become a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Captain Phillips ★★★ 1/2 In April 2009, the cargo freighter Maersk Alabama was hijacked by four Somali pirates. Unable to control the ship, they fled in a lifeboat, holding Capt. Richard Phillips for ransom. Before reaching shore, a team of Navy SEALs put an abrupt end to the hostage negotiations. Director Paul Greengrass' harrowing, bluntly titled Captain Phillips is a tricky picture with a lot on its mind, at times both pulse-pounding and deeply mournful. It reminded me of Zero Dark Thirty in the way it rewires action-movie conventions to remove any trace of triumphalism, and manages to keep you on the edge of your seat even though everybody already knows the ending. The final scenes are overpowering, with Greengrass mercilessly tightening the suspense screws as Tom Hanks fearlessly goes to emotional places we've never seen in his entire career. It's a brutal knockout of an ending, bold enough to leave you with the nagging impression that good hasn't conquered evil so much as a few mosquitoes have been swatted. This film sticks in your gut. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Carrie ★ I suppose if someone absolutely had to undertake the fool's errand of remaking Brian De Palma's lurid 1976 psychosexual classic, there are worse choices than director Kimberly Peirce, who so sensitively chronicled the tragic tale of a transgender teen in 1999's Boys Don't Cry. Alas, you'll find little of Peirce's outsider empathy in this shockingly cheap-looking knockoff. Stephen King's original story is so hilariously overloaded with metaphor—a teenage girl's burgeoning sexuality manifests itself as destructive supernatural power—De Palma's overripe phantasmagoria is probably the only sane way to go. Peirce pays lip service to social-media bullying, but Chloë Grace Moretz's Carrie White is far too poised to summon much sympathy. As Carrie's crazy mom, Julianne Moore reprises her Sarah Palin performance to little effect, and a finale that should be horrifying plays more like an audition for the next X-Men movie. The most ineptly assembled studio picture I've seen in years, Carrie is so incompetently staged that I actually found myself laughing out loud at a fake sunset. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Don Jon ★ Joseph Gordon-Levitt brings to his performances a sly, understated intelligence that often allows him to abscond with scenes out from under the noses of his more openly demonstrative co-stars. Which is all a roundabout way of saying it's a terrible idea to cast this guy as The Situation. Written and directed by the enterprising young actor, Don Jon is a barn-door-broad burlesque of Joisey stereotypes and holy-cannoli accents. Snapping gum and pulling faces as the title character, Gordon-Levitt stars as a neat-freak, fitness-obsessed lothario. This handsome bartender has an aversion to wearing shirts with sleeves; he's a dimwitted chick magnet, hooked on Internet porn. A compulsive masturbator with a penchant for flattened vowels, Jon scores most nights of the week, and then secretly retires to his living room and finishes himself off in front of the computer with a handful of Kleenex. Like most current indies, Don Jon is curiously devoid of subplots and struggles to barely crawl across the 90-minute mark. It's a silly vanity project from a young talent who should know better. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Enough Said ★★★ 1/2 A bittersweet farewell to the great James Gandolfini, this romance from writer-director Nicole Holofcener is funny, sad and wise about the crazy ways we torment ourselves in this thing called love. But unlike most synthetic rom-coms, Enough Said is uniquely attuned to the weary rhythms of middle age—it's about the surprise of finding someone when you've already been around the block a few times. Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a swank Los Angeles neighborhood. Gandolfini is the slovenly hunk who steals her heart. He's a big, slightly sad guy who seems to have settled for his lot in life years ago, but he's now surprised and delighted by the sudden arrival of this neurotic mess. Their chemistry is magic. She's all sharp right angles; he's a round Barcalounger Buddha. Louis-Dreyfus and Gandolfini's first date is one of the most purely pleasurable sequences I've seen this year, with two jaded, cautious people lowering their defenses and feeling each other out. Just lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

CARRIE ON Chloë Grace Moretz and Julianne Moore star in the remake of the 1976 horror film classic Carrie.

Escape Plan ★★★ Arnold Schwarzenegger's brief cameos were the highlights of Sylvester Stallone's Expendables pictures, so it was only a matter of time until these former rivals got around to spending more than a few minutes together onscreen. Cheerfully preposterous and proudly low-rent, director Mikael Hafström's endearingly junky meat-and-potatoes throwback coasts on the chemistry of its co-stars. Sly stars an escape artist who works as the "resident Houdini" for a private security firm, but runs out of luck when he's cut off from his support team and trapped in a quasi-futuristic CIA black site that looks like a cheaply decorated Hollywood soundstage. Our hero's only hope is a suspiciously friendly detainee, magnificently named Emil Rottmayer and played with contagious self-delight by Schwarzenegger. The Italian Stallion graciously hands the movie over to the Governator, rolling his eyes while his sidekick indulges in all manner of giddy vulgarities and wannabe catchphrases. Ah-nald hasn't been this much fun in decades. For some viewers, that will be more than enough. Your personal mileage may vary. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gravity ★★★ Alfonso Cuarón's first film since 2006's Children of Men is a technical astonishment, and it's easy to see why it's been five years in the making. Gravity is first and foremost a wonder to watch, demanding to be seen on the largest screen possible. As a technological milestone, Gravity is astounding. As a movie, it's pretty OK. Sandra Bullock and George Clooney star as astronauts stranded in space after a terrifying hailstorm of Russian satellite debris makes a mess of their mission. Gravity is for all intents and purposes a computer-animated movie, with actual photography of the actors' heads stuck in the middle of the most photo-realistic CGI that I have ever seen. But then about halfway through, Gravity decides it needs to be "about" something. Yet the thunderous banality of this screenplay cannot detract from the accomplishment of Cuarón's filmmaking. I've honestly never seen anything like it, the rootless camera so indifferent to the characters, inviting us to just dwell for a bit in the vast, airless emptiness of space. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somervillc and in the suburbs.)

Last Vegas ★★ 1/2 Seniors say the darndcst things in director Jon Turtletaub's harmless, calculatedly crowd-pleasing entry in the crazy-old-coots genre. Michael Douglas, Robert De Niro, Morgan Freeman and Kevin Kline star as childhood friends in Sin City for one last bachelor party. Douglas' aging lothario aims to finally tie the knot with a bimbo half his age, much to the consternation of the teasing geezers in his entourage. Don't expect any Hangover-styled hijinks, as these four not-so-bad grandpas stroll through a few family-friendly, mildly amusing comic interludes largely predicated upon product placement and thc gang's antiquated notions of Rat Pack cool. Douglas gamcly sends up his spray-tanned vanity, making eyes at Mary Steenburgen's sassy loungc singcr. Freeman busts somc surprising moves on the dance floor, Kline shouldcrs the film's blessedly few Viagra jokcs and De Niro acts a bit more alert than his late-career somnambulist standard. It's a cast of relaxcd old pros with easy chemistry, all of whom scem to bc having a great deal of fun. The feeling is almost mutual. (At Boston Common, Fcnway and in the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★ 1/2 A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appcar in the official title, which is ironic because this is thc least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has cvcr made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takcs it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White Housc butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a bricf history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is oftcn thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring scrvant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Danicls' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy matcrial, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Romeo & Juliet ★ 1/2 Director Carlo Carlei delivcrs a curiously flat, passionless take on Shakespeare's oft-filmed talc of star-crossed lovers. Absent the youthful ardor that has made the play a rite of passage for generations of heartsick teens, this is a stuffy, old-fashioned production shot on distractingly spotless sets. Downton Abbey scribe Julian Fellowes has taken a red pen to the tcxt; the abridgment alternates between streamlining and butchery. Hotheaded young Romeo (Douglas Booth) falls head over heels for innocent Juliet (Hailee Steinfeld), and their forbidden romance spins incvitably toward tragedy. But you're not going to find much of a spark between these secret lovers. British TV actor Booth preens through the paces like a male model, content to let his bee-stung lips do the acting for him. Steinfeld is simply adrift. She rushes through her lines as if trying to finish them as quickly as possible. It's not a good sign when the weakest scenes in Romeo & Juliet are the ones involving Romeo and Juliet. This affair feels like much ado about nothing. (At Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Runner Runner ★★ It's a shame Ben Affleck is always trying so hard to be a soulful leading man, because he's better than almost anybody else in the business when it comes to playing callow douchebags. This absurdly derivative thriller from the writers of Rounders stars an uncharacteristically dull Justin Timberlake as a Princeton poker ace fleeced out of his tuition money by Affleck's shady off-shore gambling website. If you've seen The Firm, The Devil's Advocate, Two for the Money or any other picture in the "corrupt mentor" genre, there won't be any surprises when Timberlake finds himself seduced into Affleck's high-rolling world of Costa Rican luxury and then, very slowly, discovers appearances can be deceiving. There's not an original note in this movie, and director Brad Furman has a knack for always putting the camera in exactly the wrong place. But the future Batman carries the lazy programmer on his shoulders, having a grand time living up to the ridiculous name "Ivan Block"—at one point even feeding his enemies to crocodiles. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Rush ★★★ The great thing about Ron Howard movies is that nobody's ever going to be in any danger of missing the point. But Rush is one of his good ones. This propulsive piece of mythmaking follows the famous 1976 rivalry between Formula One racers Niki Lauda (Daniel Brühl) and James Hunt (Chris Hemsworth). Speeding around the track during appalling weather conditions in what basically amounts to a rickety go-kart strapped with tanks of rocket fuel, these hotshots boast about the fact that at least two of them die every year. For all intents and purposes, a philosophical argument takes place at 140 mph. Rush pits Brühl's no-nonsense, disciplined Lauda against Hemsworth's swaggering, womanizing Hunt during a championship season full of so many surprises you'd think the writer was a hack if this all hadn't actually happened. Screenwriter Peter Morgan sets the stage for a high-octane riff on Amadeus. Shot by the groundbreaking digital videographer Anthony Dod Mantle and cut into concussive mini-scenes by editor Daniel P. Hanley, this sucker moves. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Trials of Muhammad Ali ★★ Muhammad Ali's journey from pariah to icon says so much about the contradictions of this country's history, there's probably no way any single movie could do it justice (though Michael Mann's stubbornly artsy, underrated 2001 biopic Ali comes close). Content to remain outside the ring, Bill Siegel's documentary utilizes talking-head clips and archival footage in an attempt to contextualize the years-long furor and eventual Supreme Court battle over Ali's refusal to serve in Vietnam. You won't find Howard Cosell here, and I think that might be why Siegel's narrow focus sounds admirable in theory, but feels so thin and limited in practice. Consigning the fighter's remarkable feats of athleticism as a footnote and sticking strictly to religion and politics takes away what made him Muhammad Ali. It's a maddeningly incomplete portrait of the champ on the defensive, where he was never at his best. Throughout the film we long to see the swagger and the grace of the loudmouth know-it-all who could call himself "The Greatest," because he was. (At Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BRIT CHICK English pop singer Kate Nash has been busy since her first album, Made of Bricks, debuted at the top of the charts in 2007, and her side projects have seeped into her sound. She's moonlighted with a punk band. She founded the Rock 'N' Roll for Girls After-School Music Club, which aims to foster the next generation of female musicians, and became an ambassador for the Because I Am a Girl campaign, which expands opportunities for girls in the developing world. That riot grrrl spirit drives her latest album, the cathartic, punk-inflected Girl Talk, released on her own label in March. Get talking at the House of Blues on Nov. 8. Hannah Weintraub

Meet the New Game-Changer
Canon proudly introduces the EOS 70D - a trailblazing powerhouse featuring a revolutionary autofocus technology that unlocks the potential of Live View. This game-changing technology allows the EOS 70D to capture video in Live View with smooth and precise autofocus and with camcorder like precision.

Empowerment! Canon engineers spent months ensuring that the cutting-edge Dual Pixel CMOS AF on the EOS 70D is compatible with 103 Canon EF lenses. Built-in wireless technology further enhances shooting versatility, as well as enabling easy sharing. Brilliant image quality is provided by the EOS 70D's 20.2 Megapixel CMOS APS-C sized sensor. A powerful Image Processor supports shooting up to 7.0 frames per second, as well as an extended ISO range of 100-12800 with expansion to 25600.

In-camera imaging features like HDR, HDR Backlight Control, Multiple Exposure, Handheld Night Scene, and Creative Filters available in real time help turn even simple images into spectacular photos. Elevating the possibilities of creative expression to extraordinary new heights, the powerful EOS 70D offers the ability to capture both amazing stills and video right in your hands.

FUJIFILM
w/15-55mm

Because the Best Moments Won't Come to You.

Weighing only 350g, the lightweight, compact body makes the X-E1 the perfect travel companion.

With the superb performance of its 18-55mm zoom lens, fleeting moments are framed and focused in an instant. The design of the X-Trans CMOS sensor taps into the full power of its APS-C sized sensor and captures images with exceptional resolution, smooth tonality and minimal noise.

As you peer through the OLED viewfinder and compose your shot on the 2.36 M-dot canvas, your left hand instinctively finds the aperture ring while your right hand immediately adjusts the exposure compensation and shutter speed dials.

Every aspect of the intuitive system lets you concentrate on the shot you're taking, while giving you the confidence of direct controls. Your Journey with the X-E1! Simple landscapes become dramatic cinematic scenes. A girl spotted on a stroll transforms into an intriguing heroine. The X-E1 takes you another step closer to capturing the ultimate moment.

DOUBLE TAKE In the age of Photoshop, it's easy for a photographer to alter an image. The many manipulations we see daily can leave us wondering whether an exceptional photo is the result of an extraordinary happening or just the touch of a digital mastermind. Mass.Art's Reality Check exhibit features photographers who've forgone retouching and Photoshop tweaks. But these aren't just normal moments; they're jaw-dropping shots carefully captured with non-digital processes. Take Virginia Placement, which had Stephen Mallon focusing his lens on a vehicle suspended above water. See beauty in a raw form at Mass.Art's Bakalar Gallery through Dec. 7. Maria Scemma

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

BROWNSTONE offers America style comfort foods with a twist

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

WHAT? NO FAT LADY?

The Boston Lyric Opera certainly knows how to sex things up for its Opening Night Gala, which featured go-go boys, acrobats, stilt walkers and a smokingly hot woman (in the most literal possible sense) twirling a flaming hula hoop.

The evening began tamely enough, with cocktails in the lobby of the Wang Theatre. But when a tribe of hot boys who looked like they got lost on their way to a jungle-themed costume party came to usher everyone to their tables for dinner, things began to get steamy.

Seamy, even, as one guest admitted, "I copped a feel."

Front and center were co-chairs Ann Beha, Lynn Dale and Jessica Donohue, opera buffs Steve and Jane Akin with their stunning daughter, Kyla de Asla, and her handsome husband, Richard, the dashing Andrew Marconi, über arts patrons Ray and Maria Stata, Tanglewood Festival Chorus singer Barbara Fox and her other half, biotech mogul Jonathan Saxton, brunette banking babe Dora Lewin and her concert pianist husband, Michael, noted malacologist Will Heward and the flawless Ashley Wisneski, South End hotties Kurt Gress and Sam Parkinson, and so on and so forth.

After dinner, the scantily clad performers escorted guests across the street to the Shubert Theatre for the premiere of a brand-new production of The Magic Flute. At the afterparty, everyone toasted its resounding success, and then shook and shimmied until the cows came home.

The award for Most Quintessential Bostonian goes to the thrifty, well-bred woman who accepted a compliment on her gown by saying, "Thanks! It goes back tomorrow. I rented it."

Meanwhile, the evening's funniest exchange took place between the woman who said, "I just saw this amazing documentary about how 400 people control all the wealth in this country," and the friend who responded, "And 200 of them are probably right here in this room."

EYE-OPENING...

Perkins School for the Blind gave guests a taste of what it's like to be blind at Taste of Perkins, an elegant cocktail party where attendees were blindfolded and then led to tables for a blind tasting of food and wine.

"I think everyone should have to wear a blindfold to bid in the silent auction, too," joked one person, while others marveled at the treasures (Helen Keller's enormous globe, for instance) and technological innovations on display in the neo-Gothic splendor of the Howe Building, with student musicians playing in the background.

Front and center were such bold names as Celtics grand poobah Wyc Grousbeck and advocate/activist Corinne, the newly hirsute Dan Avery and his hotelier husband, Benson Willis, the achingly lovely Mary Renner and her dashing other half, Peter, professional chocoholic Bianca Garcia, do-gooder Adam Klein and bespoke cookie maker Carol Spickler, who eventually gathered round to watch the celebrity taste challenge, featuring Charles Hotel GM Alex Attia, restaurateur Mary-Catherine Deibel, award-winning chefs Joe Cassinelli, Peter Davis and Tim Maslow, radio great Jordan Rich and the school's president, Steven Rothstein.

When the results were tallied, Deibel and Rich tied, correctly identifying two of the "taste morsels," while the event raised 50 percent more than expected and everyone went home feeling fat and happy.

The winner in the wishful thinking category: the woman who said, "Wouldn't it be great if food you ate blindfolded didn't have any calories?"

NO TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION

Thankfully, Old Ironsides was open for business (the federal government shutdown having ended earlier that day), when the USS Constitution Museum hosted its annual Chairman's Dinner and Award Ceremony at the Seaport Hotel.

Among the salty dogs on hand were sailing historian Matthew Stackpole, blue-blooded rummy Andrew Cabot, the hale and hearty Bob Storer, southern belle Carla Blakley and her Yankee other half, Paul McDonough, Republican publican Tom Kershaw squiring Anita Ekberg lookalike Lindy Roethlisberger, mythical creature Ben Bradlee Jr., son of a Speaker man Tom O'Neill, best-selling author Bill Martin and the delightful and delovely Chris, tall drink of water Charlie Baker, latter-day Marcello Mastrianni Richard DeAgazio, pretty much every power broker in town, and lots of men and women in uniform.

During the cocktail hour, people sipped drinks and chitchatted amiably; then came a dinner accompanied by a live auction conducted by the highly entertaining Westy Saltonstall and the presentation of the prestigious award to media mogul Peter Smyth.

The evening's most loaded remark: "I'd really like to host those idiots in Congress for a tour of the Constitution, which they shut down for the past few weeks, and then take 'em over to the Tea Party ship and toss 'em overboard." ◆

ROAST WANTED

I ONCE SPENT THANKSGIVING ROOTLING around Allston with a couple of Canadian friends. It was the first time I'd passed the holiday with neither family nor stuffing. Instead of giblet gravy, we had malt vinegar; instead of a roast, we had the Sunset Grill and Tap's fish and chips. A table of noisy punk girls made up the only other clientele—like their fishnets, grunge still clung on in tatters, and tattoos still carried a minor subversive tang that wouldn't fully dissipate until the ascension of Angelina Jolie. There had been a cold snap, and a soft down of snow feathered the pavements. We pounded Guinness and swaggered, and felt like we had discovered something cool, even a little impious. I remember wondering why everyone didn't skip the tired performances of oven and table and grace.

The reason, of course, is that people want to feel at home during the roast meat festivals (hosting tip: insist that your guests shovel the driveway, or at least contribute to the rent). Our urge to cluster feels more intense with the scents of baked gingerbread and animals. People want connection and continuity and comfort under the blank winter sky. We want cinnamon cookies. We want a snugly furnished womb.

We don't, however, necessarily want a menu prescribed by 19th-century romantic notions of a 17th-century Wampanoag diet. Roast turkeys were fashionable in Dickens' era, but polite society has long since embraced the spicy yellowtail roll. It's time to evolve. In this issue, four celebrity chefs offer festive main courses that shirk from cranberry sauce, and we ask bartenders how to stock a very exciting liquor cabinet.

KEEPING UP WITH KRIS HUMPHRIES »»

POST MOVES

Sharp shooter

With the new season underway, we talked with Boston Celtics new addition Kris Humphries about teamwork with stylists, splurging on sports cars and jumping through hoops for women.

On getting dressed
"I do a lot myself, but being as big as I am, I have to have a lot of stuff made. And it's harder to find pieces, so I work with someone to find me stuff. It's a collaboration a lot of times."

On his biggest extravagance
"I like cars. I have a 1970 Oldsmobile 442 convertible that I redid a couple of years ago. You can go spend a ton of money on a Ferrari or a crazy Bentley, but I think people appreciate an older car because people see it and they are like, 'I remember that car! My brother had that growing up!'"

On impressing girls
"I don't really believe in doing that whole thing. On a date, a girl acts perfect, I act perfect and people aren't really themselves. I think the best way to get to know someone is just to hang out as friends, and if everyone gets along, then things progress from there. But the whole 'Hey, I just met you, let's go on a date, pick you up at 7,' it's just so phony to me."

On giving back
"I love doing community work. We've been doing stuff with kids and all that. I just try to help out where I can, because obviously I'm fortunate to be in the position I am in. Pretty much everyone in the locker room is, and we always try to give back. It's more than basketball. You're somebody people look up to, and at the same time you can affect a lot of lives." / Sarah Hagman

WITH BOND REGARDS

JASON BOND GETS COOKING IN CONCORD.

With the opening of Bondir Concord in the eponymous suburb, how will chef/owner Jason Bond keep the home fires burning at the original Bondir in Cambridge? Simple: He'll spend time at each venue daily (but "mostly" in Concord), and he'll rely on a crack staff to handle both kitchens.

In Concord, his former sous-chef Rachel Miller will be "in effect, chef de cuisine, but I'm trying not to get her head too swelled yet," Bond says with a laugh. Leading the team in Cambridge will be the "very talented" Mark Sheehan, bolstered by new sous-chef Jade Boyd. Everybody, Bond says, shares the "same ideas, goals, cooks and farms," although different chefs mean different menus.

At a pre-opening friends-and-family dinner, Bond served up dishes destined for Concord's starting menu. First came a turnip soup (starring turnips from Bond's quarter-acre garden in Carlisle) with Liberty apples, maple syrup and fresh chestnuts from Boxborough. Next up: spaghetti with toasted breadcrumbs, anchovies, garlic and a shaving of fresh white truffles ("They're only $2,000 a pound this year!" Bond exclaims). The main course was Scituate cod étouffée with cipollini onions and fennel (again from the garden). Finally, dessert was a duo of roasted pumpkin gelato topped with gingerbread crumbs and an apple birch-bark sorbet.

Making of Merchant
Back in Boston, watch for a December debut for the Merchant on Franklin Street. Matthew Foley, a former sous-chef at Craigie on Main, has big plans for the 200-seat space in the former London Harness Company location. Serving lunch and dinner seven days a week, the "New American brasserie" will boast a 40-foot bar, a "creative" wine list, three dozen beers on tap, a raw bar and two private dining rooms.

Nice address
Farther afield, local restaurateur Steve DiFillippo has unveiled his latest Davio's Northern Italian Steakhouse—the seventh outpost in his growing group—in Manhattan, at 451 Lexington Ave.

Imperatives

From a Land Down Under

Before malbec there was shiraz, and after malbec there will be... shiraz. Call it whatever you want, syrah or shiraz, but the rags-to-riches and back to rags red grape variety that made Australia so famous in the wine world is just too inherently layered with flavor (especially compared to its more one-dimensional successor) not to rise again. My recent blind tastings indicate that opportunities are out there for anyone who's got an open mind and palate. Even better news. Prices have moderated. The following winners from Down Under are highly recommended.

PETER LEHMANN PORTRAIT SHIRAZ, BAROSSA VALLEY, 2011
If you crave big, meaty reds with a hint of leather and earth, Barossa Valley is where it's at. Peter Lehmann is a venerable producer that has never wavered from offering benchmark shiraz at a reasonable price. This vintage emphasizes the floral nature of the variety, while offering signature peppery brown-spice notes. Soft in tannin, mellow in flavor, but substantial in weight, it has a nice casual style that would enliven an herb-rubbed roast chicken.

...

THE LUCKY COUNTRY SHIRAZ, MCLAREN VALE, 2012
Lush and layered with black raspberry, creamy oak and lavish vanilla notes, this delicious shiraz hails from the cooler climate of the McLaren Vale district. A bit more smoky than spicy in style, it has a backbone of tart acidity that balances the bold, smooth dark fruit. Delicious is the operative word. I've thoroughly enjoyed it with a grilled pepper-encrusted swordfish.

...

HEARTLAND SHIRAZ, LANGHORNE CREEK, 2010
2010 was a special vintage in South Australia. This major-league red oozes rich, jammy plum and berry flavors with undertones of cocoa, licorice and aromatic Asian spices. Juicy and bright, it's also the most powerful and ripe shiraz of the group. Produced by shiraz guru Ben Glaetzer from a coastal district southeast of McLaren Vale, this has an intensity, concentration and length of flavor that makes it an ideal match for barbecued ribs.

A Bounty for Thanksgivukkah

On Nov. 28, a once-in-a-lifetime holiday will be cause for twice the celebration when the first day of Hanukkah falls on Thanksgiving. For the food-filled event that won't be back for more than 70,000 years, chef Marjorie Druker and others are swapping sweet potatoes for potato latkes and making hybrid dishes for your jam-packed Thanksgivukkah dinner table. / Hannah Weintraub

PUMPKIN CUSTARD KUGEL

from the kitchen of chef Marjorie Druker of the Modern Rotisserie and New England Soup Factory

INGREDIENTS

- 1 stick of butter
- 16 ounces of cream cheese
- 1 pint of sour cream
- 15 ounces of pumpkin puree
- 1½ cups of sugar
- 8 jumbo eggs
- 1 quart of whole milk
- ½ cup of molasses
- 1 tablespoon of nutmeg
- ½ teaspoon of ground cloves
- 1 teaspoon of allspice
- 1 pound of slightly undercooked wide egg noodles

Topping

- ¼ cup of chopped pecans
- 1 tablespoon of cinnamon
- 2 tablespoons of sugar

DIRECTIONS

Custard: Whip butter and cream cheese. Add sour cream, pumpkin puree and sugar, and mix again. Add eggs, one at a time, beating after each one. Add whole milk, salt, molasses, nutmeg, ground cloves and allspice, and mix together. In a large mixing bowl, pour custard over egg noodles and mix well. Pour into a buttered baking dish, and place dish in a roasting pan filled with water to create a water bath. Topping: Sprinkle chopped pecans, cinnamon and sugar. Bake uncovered for one hour at 350 degrees. Remove from the oven and let rest for a day. Reheat before serving.

AW, SHUCKS

THE ISLAND CREEK OYSTER BAR TEAM MAKES A SPLASH IN FORT POINT.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO, OYSTERS WERE A rarity outside of specialty raw bars and the odd seafood shack. Now, restaurants aplenty feature the very word in their names. Row 34, slated to open this month from the team behind Island Creek Oyster Bar, might have them all beat: There are oysters in the building's foundation.

The Fort Point space has seen many previous uses—from wool and sugar manufacturers to steel distribution to artist lofts—but you could say a beer and oyster joint was always in its future. When it was being cleared for renovations, workers found oyster shells on the floor, which ICOB partner Shore Gregory figures were used in the foundation mixture when the building was constructed more than a century ago.

It's what's above the foundation, however, that has Gregory and the rest of the ICOB team (Skip Bennett, Jeremy Sewall, Garrett Harker) most enthused. With long windows, exposed brick and polished black concrete floors, Row 34 fits perfectly into Fort Point's aesthetic.

"This neighborhood is a treasure to the city," Gregory says. "At Island Creek, we wanted make you feel like you were transported away from Kenmore Square and to our oyster farm, but here we want you to feel like you're right in Fort Point."

A bar displaying raw oysters and two beer towers is the first thing that most customers will see. A smaller dining room is dressed with oyster farm implements, while the main dining area will be adorned with an image from local artist Stephen Sheffield. Windows overlook a warm-weather patio—a rare outside dining spot for the locale.

Oysters and beer are the main attractions. Harker promises 24 drafts, with possible selections from local brewers like Pretty Things, Mystic Brewery and next-door neighbor Trillium. Executive chef Sewall and chef de cuisine Francisco Millan plan seafood dishes that are less composed than those at Island Creek, with a focus on the simple and seasonal. They also plan to expand the ceviche and crudo menu from ICOB, and there's a whole fish of the day.

ICOB regulars will notice more than just familiar mollusks. A lot of the faces running the restaurant are coming over from the Kenmore Square destination. It was one of the main reasons for Harker and the rest of the team to open up the new spot.

"You can watch all these talented people leave and go do something else great in our city, or you can roll up your sleeves," he says. "We decided to create that opportunity for them right here."

TED TALK

Former Boston Globe reporter and editor Ben Bradlee Jr. explores the complicated life and death of Ted Williams in his new biography, The Kid, out Dec. 3.

WHAT WOULD TED WILLIAMS SAY ABOUT THE SOX'S RECENT STRING OF SUCCESS, HAVING NEVER WITNESSED A RED SOX TITLE? I'm sure he'd be delighted and maybe a little bit envious because he only had one World Series appearance, and that was in 1946, when the Red Sox also played the St. Louis Cardinals and the Red Sox lost in seven games. That was a crushing disappointment for Williams because he had one of his worst showings at the plate, and he was criticized roundly for not delivering in a key situation.

WHAT DO YOU THINK WILLIAMS' CAREER WOULD'VE BEEN LIKE IF HE HADN'T MISSED TIME TO FIGHT WARS? Well, that's one of the favorite guessing games that people play with Ted, imagining what his statistics would have been, had he not missed almost five years of his prime. Most people think he would've been close to 700 home runs, which would have been just short of the old 714 home-run record set by Babe Ruth.

DO YOU THINK WILLIAMS WOULD FIT INTO THIS WORLD SERIES RED SOX ROSTER? With the Band of Beards and all of that? I think so. He was a loner, though, and I think he led by example—he was not a rah-rah guy. So I'm not sure that he would've been leaping out of the dugout to tug on the beards of his teammates. It wasn't quite his style.

WHO WOULD SOX FANS WANT AT BAT MORE: DAVID ORTIZ OR TED WILLIAMS IN HIS PRIME? I think Williams. He had a magnetism and an aura about him that was really unique. I'm old enough that I saw him play the last three or four years of his career here, and there was nothing like Ted Williams at bat. The atmospherics in the park changed; people would come to the edge of their seat and concentrate totally on his at bat. There's a lovely story that I have in the book that illustrates that. One of the sportswriters of the day, Tim Horgan, once noticed a blind man at the field, and he said, "Excuse me, sir, why do you come to the games when you can listen to them on the radio?" He said, "I like the sounds of the park when Ted Williams comes to bat." / Hannah Sneinberg

STEAMROLLER

PRICE: $9

INGREDIENTS: Anchor Steam beer, Old Overholt rye, elderflower liqueur, Cherry Heering liqueur, Bitter Truth barrel-aged bitters

BACKGROUND: "People in Europe have been drinking shandies for years," says Union general manager Greg Dickinson. This is an autumnal version of that

SO IT'S A BOILERMAKER: No. A boilermaker is a two-dimensional means for delivering alcohol to the bloodstream. This is a cocktail. "We wanted to accentuate the malty quality and the toasty notes," Dickinson says. "That's where the rye came in. Then the floral notes come out with the elderflower, and the citrus notes with the Cherry Heering."

FLAVOR: The rye dominates the nose, with the malt from the Anchor Steam spiced by the bitters. It's only in the aftertaste that you substantively feel the fruit and elderflower. Then you take a second sip, and the train of flavors is reversed. It's very eventful.

CONTEXT: "Beer cocktails are bigger on the West Coast, but they're starting to make their way over here," Dickinson says. "I'm finding that [the local beer industry] is just as exciting as what's going on with the cheese industry."

UNION BAR AND G
1357 Washington S
Boston (617-423-
unionrestaurant.c

CHALLENGE: People sometimes balk at the hops in beer cocktails ("beer bations" is Union's term). "It's a bitter flavor that a lot of people don't embrace in a cocktail. We use a lot of citrus juices and cordials to achieve a balance."

NEXT ROUND: For sweeter sips, try the Drunk Pumpkin, made with Southern Tier Imperial "Pumpking" Ale and vanilla vodka, or the Velvet Elvis, with stout, sherry and Benedictine.

PAIR IT WITH: "The obvious choice is the burger," Dickinson says. Or the excellent pheasant stuffed with foie gras and dressed with cranberry sauce. "Poultry and lighter meats." / Andrew Rimas

LAST STRAND: The Hair Reborn treatment focuses on deep conditioning.

Noggin Nourishment

Your hair care routine probably consists of something like this: wash, blow-dry, flat iron, repeat ad nauseam until your hair looks like the first half of a Garnier Fructis commercial. Conditioners come and go, but now a local salon promises to break the cycle. G2O Spa + Salon is the only Boston vendor of TIGI's Hair Reborn treatment, available in three "journeys": Resurgence for dehydration, Serenity for frizz and Awakening for weakness, all safe for color-treated hair. To find out which path to take, stylists perform a strand test (checking for factors like hair elasticity) before applying potent "hyper-distilled" products. Though it takes only 10 minutes to set, a treatment can last from two weeks to a month, thanks to formulas made with concentrated ingredients like babassu oil. / Jemma Douglas

A FIT OF BEAK

A COMIC GUIDE TO BIRDING

Why Do Bluebirds Hate Me?* by Mike O'Connor
Published by Beacon Press, 200 pages, $13 paperback
The author owns the Bird Watcher's General Store in Orleans.

BIRD BOOKS, HIGHLY FACTUAL AND USEFUL for the binocular-gazing set, aren't usually funny. Mike O'Connor answers avian questions with hilarity that also contains real information. We learn that the songs of "Hip Catbirds" may "last 10 minutes or more, with the occasional guitar solo in the middle." Migrating Sandhill Cranes, 500,000 of them, solidify their pair bonds by dancing wildly, "like marionettes controlled by a puppeteer on acid, or me trying to do 'The Hustle' at a wedding."

And those colorful, flickery hummingbirds can get eaten by a much smaller praying mantis. Worse, the spider webs that hummingbirds use for housing can tangle the invading bird, who can get bitten and killed by the invaded arachnid. Turnaround is fair play.

Then there are bobwhites—romantic birds who "tidbit," or feed each other like a bride and groom, and have "ridiculously cute" chicks. But sometimes another male bird "uncle" enters the scene rather unhelpfully: "[He] keeps promising he'll get a job but never does." O'Connor conveys real data amid the humor. We learn, for instance, that ducks, lacking "leg warmers or a new pair of Uggs," keep their winter feet warm via a countercurrent circulation of blood.

FROM PAGE 99: One way we can help the Blue Jays, and save our decks and homes from being stripped clean, is to provide the birds with some calcium by putting out eggshells. While feeding one bird the shells of another bird's babies may be a moral dilemma for some people, jays have no problem with it. After you've made your famous rhubarb and rutabaga quiche, take the empty eggshells, place them on a cookie sheet, pop them into a 250-degree oven... Put the shells outside, and the birds will take it from there. ◆

HEIGHTENED INTEREST

WITH ALPINE SCENERY AND LOCAL TRADITIONS, INNSBRUCK, AUSTRIA, IS ON THE UP AND UP.

ON A FLIGHT INTO INNSBRUCK, THE plane feels like it's listing to the side, since half of the passengers get out of their seats to stare at the snow-capped peaks below. Cradled between the Alps in the Austrian state of Tirol, Innsbruck is a place where locals ski on their lunch breaks, the men sport lederhosen and the views, either from the city center or a summit, are like gigantic Ansel Adams photographs. Previously home to the Habsburgs and their famous jawlines, the city is also famous for hosting three Winter Olympics. And taking advantage of the natural landscape is the best way to burn off the schnitzel.

The heart of the city is divided into Old Town and New Town, even though the two towns are only a few streets apart and were both in existence before America was even a gleam in Thomas Jefferson's eye. New Town houses contemporary shops and malls, while Old Town, circa the 1300s, is gothic-style, with homes that formerly used their facade hues as advertising: blue for bakeries, green for wineries and red for butcher shops. Women in this area wearing dirndls aren't hired by the city to create a Disney-esque environment—residents here still sport traditional Austrian clothing and are able to identify each other's villages by the different styles. In case you're looking to dress the part, the Steinbock & Cie boutique sells dirndls, lederhosen and special-occasion tratchen. Next to the shop is the Golden Roof, a former royal box that Emperor Maximilian I used for watching public events in the square below. With 2,657 fire-gilded copper tiles, it makes luxury boxes in Fenway look like a place fit for peasants.

Though the archway-lined and flower-box-filled streets of Old Town look like they're designed for fairy tale illustrations, the area features eateries fit for any real-life appetite. Visit Speckeria on Hofgasse to sample speck, or smoked bacon, sourced directly from mountain farmers. The meat can be eaten by itself or between slices of Austria's signature brown bread. For dessert, head diagonally across the street to Strudel-Cafe Kröll for warm apfelstrudel, topped with powdered sugar. Here you can sit outside on fur-lined chairs in the shadow of the Habsburgs' Imperial Palace. For a modern interpretation of traditional fare, head outside of Old Town to Europa Stüberl in the Grand Hotel Europa, where the menu includes entrees of local venison and wild boar. The kitchen's distinction is evident even before your meal, with homemade bread that combines four dough varieties into one loaf, and after, with from-scratch chocolate truffles. Afterward, the only mountain you should climb is to a room upstairs.

The hills here may not be alive with the sound of music (that's Salzburg), but the hills do have eyes. In the village of Wattens, about 30 minutes outside of the city, is a giant green face built into the side of a hill, complete with sparkling crystal pupils. Wattens has been the epicenter of Swarovski since 1895, and the jolly green giant is actually the entrance to Swarovski Crystal Worlds (Kristallwelten)—part modern art museum, part glittering dwarves' mine from Snow White. Designed by André Heller, the attraction is composed of 14 underground treasure chambers, each created by a different guest multimedia artist—combining music, video, art and aromatherapy for an almost hallucinogenic experience. In one chamber, visitors experience the inside of a crystal through the effects of more than 590 mirrors. Another features a hypnotic crystal meditation room designed by Brian Eno. With its jellyfish chandeliers and crystal rivers, this feels more like an Austrian folk tale than a tourist destination.

But, of course, the main draw in Innsbruck is the chance to conquer the mountains seen from the plane. For a hike that supplies continuous views, head to Patscherkofel, a mountain that may be difficult to pronounce but is filled with user-friendly trails. A cable car, or the Patscherkofelbahn, drops hikers off at 6,500 feet, which is slightly below the summit. Zirbenweg is the most popular route, tread by about 1,000 people a day, while the Jochleitensteig trail snakes around the entirety of the mountain, with views of Italy and other Alpine ridges. When the mountain goats grazing on the stone slabs remind you that it's lunchtime, stop by a hut for bratwurst, goulash with dumplings and homemade schnapps. For those looking to enjoy the view without the exertion, the Nordkettenbahn takes summit-seekers straight from the center of town to the Nordkette mountaintop in 20 minutes. The ride up is part of the allure, as the cable car slowly rises from Innsbruck to the more rugged terrain at the top. One side of the summit seems to sit directly on top of the city, but make sure to turn around to see the uninhabited Alps, a region being considered for status as a UNESCO World Heritage Site. And with jagged, bare peaks that cut through clouds, the view is breathtaking, regardless of the high altitude's thin air.

Whether you're standing on cobblestone or limestone, Innsbruck elevates expectations. ◆

TROTTER WORKS

TONY MAWS' SECOND VENTURE FIRES ON ALL CYLINDERS.

THE KIRKLAND TAP & TROTTER
425 Washington St., Somerville (857-259-6585)
kirklandtapandtrotter.com

At Somerville's new Kirkland Tap & Trotter, no less than four hyper-trendy restaurant genres converge. The gastropub. The local-seasonal bistro. The craft cocktail bar. The boundary-pushing snout-to-tail boite. The results could be disastrous, a Top 40 mashup that ends up utterly unremarkable.

Instead, the 100-plus-seat restaurant, the second from celebrated chef Tony Maws of Cambridge's Craigie on Main, is a delight. Open since September, it's already packed to the gills on weekends, and hums along pleasantly on school nights. The crowd hums, too. Under salvaged wall-hung windowpanes and the glow of Edison-style light bulbs, professor types raise forkfuls of terrine alongside families with spaghetti-slurping toddlers. (I'm betting no one told the tots there's liver in the pasta.) And there are hipsters: oh so many hipsters, sporting mustaches that would make Tom Selleck jealous. Everyone's smiling.

Or maybe they're just buzzed. The bar shakes up cocktails (all $10) that pack serious flavor and punch. The rum-based Tale of Two Kitties is sweetly spiced with a kick of fresh lime, served with a mountain of crushed ice, while the Green + Grain, a combo of rye, vermouth and Chartreuse, has a pleasantly herbaceous bite.

Resist the urge to order more than a second round, at least until you've had a chance to take in a few of the deceptively simple dishes. It'd be a shame to not savor the grilled root vegetable and farro salad, a pretty plating of cool, charred seasonal veggies in a tangy espelette vinaigrette ($14). As at Craigie, Maws makes a special effort to bring in local and in-season produce, and it pays off; even ingredients as simple as the mild and ultrasweet onions shine. Likewise, steaming plump Maine mussels ($13) with garlic and saffron makes the seafood staple new again, and careful fire-roasting intensifies the flavor of a humble half-chicken ($24).

Generally speaking, food at KT&T, as the team calls it, eschews fussiness, at least compared to its sister restaurant. Whereas Craigie's famed bar burger dials up the flavor (and prep time) by blending three cuts of grass-fed beef with marrow and dehydrated miso, here the meat stands alone. Well, sort of: Kirkland's superb burger ($16) is a ground chuck patty crowned with a changing cast of toppings, from provolone and horseradish cream to Emmenthaler and kimchee Russian dressing. It's smaller than your average bar burger, but given its richness, any more would be overkill, and the crisp potato rounds make it a meal. Pair it with a chilly pint from the bar's eclectic selection, which ranges from standards (Harpoon, Sierra Nevada) to the obscure (a Flemish sour).

Another beer-friendly plate: choucroute, or house-made sausages, crisp and fatty pork belly, and saucrkraut ($26). It's hearty winter comfort food at its best. You'll want the $6 trio of mustards spiked with beer; though it's a bit silly—and pricey—to have to order them separately, a few dollops cut through the heaviness of the meat nicely.

Maws' menu also stretches far beyond bar fare, though not to the extent of Craigie (which is known for transforming offal into haute cuisine). A small plate of octopus and hummus ($16) features a winning combo of tender tentacle meat and spiced chickpeas, both whole and in the familiar Mediterranean spread.

Misses are few and far between. Grilled lamb ribs ($15) are crusted with the French curry blend called vadouvan, and while the aroma is tantalizing, the dish is diminished by a still-chewy layer of fat. The rapini served with the roasted chicken is inedibly salty.

What doesn't fall short is dessert (all $10). Buttermilk panna cotta with huckleberries wiggles happily as it's brought to the table; after a few bites of the creamy coconut- and macadamia-sprinkled custard, you'll feel a bit giddy, too. Cornbread pain perdu, also known as French toast, is buttery and crisp, perfect for sopping up the accompanying raspberry compote and maple sugar ice cream.

Even on the busiest evenings, service is ace from start to finish. Bartenders take time to chat with guests during peak service, and with Maws helming the grill, the kitchen fields a Friday-night rush like a team of veterans. Maybe that's because they are. And while KT&T may tap into a few trends, after just a few months, it has the ease of a place that's been around for years. ◆

Q: WHAT IS A GOOD AGE TO START HAVING BOTOX TREATMENTS?

A: It all depends on how you feel about your appearance. Certainly it is time to consider Botox if you are bothered by frown lines between your eyes or on your forehead, or have developed crow's feet at the corners of your eyes.

These are "dynamic" lines that develop as a result of using the facial muscles by frowning, squinting, etc. There is a growing trend to have conservative Botox treatments as a preventive measure starting in the 20s and 30s before these facial lines become very pronounced, which may mean less Botox may be necessary as you age.

In addition to Botox, there are two other neuromodulators that have been approved by the FDA, Dysport and Xeomin, and several others are awaiting approval.

NEBRASKA ★★
Starring Bruce Dern, Will Forte, June Squibb, Bob Odenkirk and Stacy Keach. Written by Bob Nelson. Directed by Alexander Payne. At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.

Movies / Sean Burns

GROWING PAYNES

ACCLAIMED DIRECTOR'S NEBRASKA IS MONOCHROMATIC AND MONOTONOUS.

ALEXANDER PAYNE DIRECTED A BRILLIANT film starring a 1970s counterculture icon as a depressed senior citizen on a road trip across a bleak Midwestern landscape that metaphorically went nowhere, until our protagonist finally arrived at the shattering realization that his life was mediocre, wasted. That film was called About Schmidt, and Payne made it 11 years ago.

Now he's made it again, to shockingly diminished returns.

Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. From its opening moments, the retro Paramount Pictures logo has Viacom stamped across it in a distractingly modern font, while the widescreen black-and-white photography is just digital video trying to mimic film and failing miserably. This picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong.

The terminally bland Will Forte stars as David Grant, a hapless stereo salesman in Billings, Mont. He just got dumped by his plus-sized girlfriend, but that doesn't seem to bother Grant all that much. Forte is one of those guys you always overlook in a scene, even when he's the only person in the shot, so it's a relief when the focus shifts to his father, Woody.

Wild-haired Bruce Dern, a longtime cohort of Payne's Schmidt star Jack Nicholson, was never wired right to be a leading man, even in an era that prized such intense eccentricity. He was always the one chewing scenery just to the left of Redford or Voight, and he famously shot John Wayne in the back. (Comedian Patton Oswalt used to do a great bit about how he'd keep people from trying to talk to him on airplanes by acting like Bruce Dern.) The nicest thing I can say about Nebraska is that it's a kick to see this grizzled old vet take center stage at 77 years young.

Woody is a gruff, miserable alcoholic who doesn't seem to know where he is half the time. Obsessed with a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail, Woody thinks he's already won a million dollars and is hell-bent on picking it up at an office in Lincoln, Neb. For no other reason than because the screenplay says he should, Grant decides to drive his dad there—a belated father-son bonding trip.

It's hardly therapeutic. Indeed, the film peaks early, when Grant asks Woody when he decided it was time to have children. The old man knocks back another brew and croaks: "I liked to screw and your mother was a Catholic. Figured it would happen sooner or later."

There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. A too-brief turn by Breaking Bad's Bob Odenkirk as Forte's prissy back-up-local-news-anchor brother will leave you dearly wishing the siblings had swapped roles. Instead, Payne strands the entire Grant clan in their Nebraska hometown for a one-note family reunion, during which all the smiling vultures angle for a piece of Woody's non-existent prize money.

The men remain parked on sofas, silently sucking down cans of cheap domestic beer while staring blankly at the television. (Every close-up in this movie looks like a Diane Arbus photograph.) The women gossip and talk about sex, none more so than Woody's wife, Kate (June Squibb). Played by the same actress who played Mrs. Schmidt, in case it wasn't clear enough we're in rerun season, she gets more "Old Folks Say the Darndest Things" moments than the entire cast of Last Vegas. At the movie's nadir, Kate even lifts her skirt and flashes a former suitor's grave at the local cemetery. It's fitting that the guys are glimpsed watching The Golden Girls, because I swear that's where I've heard most of these jokes before.

Nebraska should have been a homecoming for Alexander Payne. His scaldingly hilarious first three films (Citizen Ruth, Election and Schmidt) were also set in his home state, laying bare the seething hostility lurking just beneath those antiseptic strip mall exteriors and overly polite Midwestern manners. But working for the first time from someone else's script (Bob Nelson takes the blame for this one), Payne drowns everybody in bathos.

It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Mark Orton's aggravatingly catchy score is ladled over every scene like maple syrup, which was expected because even Payne's best films suffer from terrible music cues.

Nebraska's biggest problem is that Dern's Woody isn't granted the conflicted inner life that Nicholson's inherent Jack-ness brought to Warren Schmidt. The end of the road here arrives not with a bang but a shrug. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. ◆

HAPPY ACCIDENTS

BERKLEE-BONDED SINGERS BLEND VOICES IN FRESH SONIC SYMMETRY.

WITH BOTH SOUND AND VISION, LUCIUS prompts a double take. At the core, the Brooklyn-based band's frontwomen—Jess Wolfe and Holly Laessig, both 28—sing in unison to share lead vocals. "It's not just singing in harmony," Wolfe says. "Our voices just fit together—and our voices apart are very different. The fact that they weave together so easily was a blessing."

The look of the group completes the symmetry. Wolfe and Laessig praetically face each other at eenterstage, identically and stylishly dressed at their dual keyboards. They're flanked by percussionist/producer Dan Molad and guitarist Andrew Burri, who literally split a drum set aeross the stage, while Pete Lalish hovers behind the women with his own guitar textures.

"We wanted it to be a little weird," says Wolfe, headed out the door from her Brooklyn home. "We wanted you to look at the stage and not see one person. We wanted you to look at the stage and see each part integral to the next—and that we're all part of this bigger machine."

The machine clicks on Lucius' entrancing debut, Wildewoman, as well. The album, released last month, nods to '60s girl groups in tunes like the handclap-laced "Turn it Around" and soul-inspired ballad "Hey, Doreen." Yet Wildewoman cuts a broader swath. Producer Molad wraps the bold melodies of songwriters Wolfe and Laessig in deeonstructed layers with primitive sonies and drum beats, from the sparse, bluesy "Go Home" to the ghostly, tribal "Nothing Ordinary."

"He hears things from a different perspeetive," Wolfe says of now-husband Molad. "He's highly influenced by vintage sounds of the '60s, Phil Speetor and Joe Meek and people like that." The scattered drum kit came about when the band praetieed in the couple's apartment. "Our neighbor kept banging on the floor, so Danny turned his kiek drum on its side," she says of the tympani-style setup. "A lot of those specifie treatments have happened because of happy aecidents."

The most fortuitous event, however, came several years ago when the Los Angeles-bred Wolfe met Cleveland native Laessig at a party in Boston while they were studying at Berklee. The two shared influences and thought about rearranging the Beatles' "White Album" in girl-group style, Wolfe says. That didn't pan out, but they began writing together, moving beyond both the girl-group idiom and the jazz they were pursuing (they got "a little burned out" on jazz, she says).

"Nine musicians in a house with one kitchen and two bathrooms—you do the math."

In Lucius, named after Wolfe's late English bulldog, they wear matching mod styles that still aeeent the girl-group associations. "People were looking at the visual and attaching the two things together," Wolfe says. She cites Sam Cooke and Roy Orbison among her earliest idols while noting that the duo gravitated to pop visionaries like David Bowie, Bjork and Kate Bush. "We've always been inspired by artists with a very strong visual presenee."

When the duo moved to Brooklyn, they even lived in an old Victorian building that married visual and musieal appeal. "There were vintage organs and a Steinway grand piano from the '20s in the living room and all these details, wood embellishments in the wall and stained glass and funky wallpaper," Wolfe says. "We found out it was a music school and reeording studio for nearly 70 years before we were there. We nurtured our writing habits on that piano."

The singers also had an "open-door musieal poliey" that filled the so-called Bromley House with aetivity—and helped yield the album Songs From the Bromley House. "It was a wonderful place to be, but not a wonderful place to be forever," she says. "Nine musieians in a house with one kitchen and two bathrooms—you do the math." Among the musicians who came through the door was Molad, whose engineering skills eame in handy when they tackled what beeame Wildewoman.

"We were really interested in experimenting, throwing spaghetti against the wall," Wolfe says of the album, whose title track plays off the word "wildebeest" because Laessig's mother called her a "wildegirl."

"We notieed how many free-spirited, follow-your-heart women we surrounded ourselves with," Wolfe says. "It's a celebration of acknowledging that—and knowing that we stuck to our guns." ◆

IF I RAN THE CITY

ADVICE FOR OUR NEXT MAYOR

I TRY TO AVOID DISCUSSING POLITICS, BUT THAT'S difficult this time of year. With elections shaping the fate of our land, November inevitably includes a political discussion or two. "We should expand the social safety net!" say my Democrat friends. "We should cut taxes!" say my Republican friends. "We should build more canals!" I say, because I am a Whig.

A couple of weeks ago, Boston elected Marty Walsh as its next mayor. Prior to the election, The Globe gave all the candidates a questionnaire on their stances. I found that I agree with Walsh on most of his positions, but some of these issues are irreducible to a yes or no answer. Thankfully for the new mayor, I'm here to explain the nuances of running a city. And if he's smart, he'll listen, just as his predecessor did when I offered detailed policy recommendations like "Hey, the waterfront—we should put some stuff down there!"

So, contentious topic No. 1: Chick-fil-A. Walsh says that he would make it harder for Chick-fil-A to open a store in Boston. I'd suggest that we take a step back and consider both sides of the issue, the human-rights side and the delicious-chicken side.

I think we all agree that the Chick-fil-A CEO is a dummy. He's the son of the company's founder, and it seems pretty clear that Chick-fil-A management views him as a dimwitted, homophobic Billy Madison. Every time he says something stupid, they issue a statement that pretty much says, "Listen, do you have a crazy uncle in your family who says embarrassing things at Thanksgiving? Of course you do. Well, so do we. We're stuck with him because his daddy started the company. Please bear with us as we encourage him to shut his piehole."

I'd suspect most people in the Chick-fil-A organization actually share our values. Plus, I don't know if you're aware of this, but Chick-fil-A was originally named "Dwarf House." I say, then, we allow a Chick-fil-A but force them to call it Dwarf House and put it in the South End, where it will become an ironic gay date-night destination. Then everybody wins.

OK, the next decision involves expanding nightlife hours. You're in favor of this. So am I, to a point. But I'd still want a cap at maybe 3 am, because otherwise you end up like New York, where people are eating dinner at midnight. If you're eating dinner at midnight, then when did you have lunch? Five o'clock? Stop it. That's insane. When bars don't close, it throws off the whole order of things, and you end up riding around at sunrise while your buddy tries to buy weed that turns out to be oregano, I'll bet.

Happy hour, on the other hand, I can totally support. You're on the record as anti happy-hour, but hear me out on this one. Some might say happy hour promotes binge drinking, but I say it frees up money for other economic purposes, like bail or buying a lobster in Chinatown and then granting it parole by throwing it in the Charles. Look, Florida has happy hours and nothing unseemly ever seems to happen down there, except for that time the other day when the cross-eyed rodeo clown fell into a sinkhole while having an archery battle with his landlady after they were at a happy hou—oh, OK. I see your point.

You mentioned you want to broaden the tax base, and I have a great idea for that: charging for Southie parking cones. You could pay $40 for a single-storm cone, $150 for a season cone and maybe $10,000 for a lifetime mega-cone. Then there could be cone upgrades—like if I have a golden cone, then I get to move your crappy bronze cone, and you're not supposed to slash my tires. And what about summer cones? That's a whole untapped market. By my calculations, this program will generate as much as $600, after accounting for the cost of the assaults and rampant property destruction that will accompany the rollout.

Some might say happy hour promotes binge drinking, but I say it frees up money for other economic purposes.

Perhaps that money can help replace revenue that won't be rolling in from a Suffolk Downs casino. You were in favor of that plan, but residents shot it down. That came as a surprise until exit polls revealed that poor wording on the ballot meant that 58 percent of voters thought they were ordering clams casino.

But I have an idea of how we can save this thing. You said you want to do something bold with City Hall Plaza? Bam—Casino Hall Plaza. Blackjack tables, resident parking stickers, craps, public-private synergy. It'll be the biggest thing since golden cones. And once it's done, maybe we can talk about another important issue. I haven't heard you say anything one way or another, but I'd like to know where you stand on canals. ◆

HOCKEY IN JUNE

THE BRUINS DEMAND ATTENTION

THE BUZZ IN OCTOBER WAS ALL ABOUT THE incredible turnaround of the local nine on Yawkey Way. The Red Sox worst-to-first campaign may have been the most compelling run around here since the New England Patriots shocked the world by taking down the Greatest Show on Turf, also known as the St. Louis Rams, in the Super Bowl in February of 2002.

However, even though much of our focus has been on other things, anybody who knows about hockey can and will tell you that the boys in black and gold are primed for a repeat trip to the Stanley Cup Finals. And if you look at how the Boston Bruins roster is currently constructed, they are in even better shape than they were a year ago.

It's enough to make a bold prediction: The Bruins will win the Cup in June.

A few days before training camp began, several of the Bruins were already full throttle into their unofficial workouts. And it was away from the rink that I got my first feel for just how brash and bold this year's Bruins would be.

Newest Bruins star Loui Eriksson, who came over from Dallas in the blockbuster deal for Tyler Seguin, was teeing it up at Ferncroft Country Club in Middleton. Eriksson parked his car perpendicular to the driving range, sure the net would protect his car. He was showing confidence that not only would he be hitting the ball straight, but his buddies would as well.

Mind you, Eriksson wasn't in a Prius. The Swedish forward was rocking a brand-new Ferrari with only about 50 miles on it. But he hadn't accounted for all the other duffers on the range that day, and within seconds of his bad decision, balls were bouncing all around his car.

I lowered my window and told Carl Söderberg, who was riding shotgun, to move the ride immediately, which he did. The right thing for him to do was to cut me a check for all the insurance issues and aggravation I saved him, but all I got was a big "Thanks!" That's OK with me, considering lots of Bruins fans will be returning the "thanks" to Eriksson this season.

I'm telling you Bruins fans out there: You're going to love this guy. Before last year's lockout-shortened season, he had posted three straight seasons with more than 70 points. After watching the 28-year-old skate at the start of the season, I have a feeling that we'll be lauding him for his gifted two-way production once we start paying full attention to the Bruins, which will probably occur sometime after the NHL's Winter Classic on New Year's Day. But with this roster, we should start sooner.

A large core group of players has already hoisted the Stanley Cup and—let's be honest—if not for a few untimely injuries, they probably would have hoisted it a second time last June.

The thing that jumps out at you, at first glance, is the balance of the four forward lines. Yes, there was balance a year ago, and it's something general manager Peter Chiarelli has preached since he took over in 2006, but Eriksson and free-agent pickup Jaromc Iginla provide more consistency on a daily basis. I'm not saying Seguin and Nathan Horton weren't talented Bruins, because they were. They just didn't perform as consistently as fans wanted.

The core of the Bruins roster is not just set for this season, but for many years to come. The forwards are as good as they've been in a long time (see Patrice Bergeron's new 8-year, $52 million deal), and the organization did the right thing in locking up franchise goalie Tuukka Rask for the next eight years (and $56 million) at the age of 26.

If you are not excited about the likes of Torey Krug, Dougie Hamilton and even Matt Bartkowski, then you aren't a Bruins fan.

That leaves us with the defense, sometimes a cause for debate. Some critics feel captain Zdeno Chara is well past his prime and didn't have his best playoff run, which might be true considering he turns 37 later this season—but even if he's past his superb prime, Chara remains one of the elite defenseman in the league. Chiarelli has added some young legs to give Chara a bit of a break on ice time this season. If you are not excited about the likes of Torey Krug, Dougie Hamilton and even Matt Bartkowski, then you aren't a Bruins fan. These three add a dimension, particularly as defensemen with a knack for a little offense, that only makes this team more dangerous.

I realize there is a lot going on right now, and hockey isn't even on our radar. But it should be. These guys deserve our attention. They have everything in place to make another exciting run and, barring injury, finish the job.

I know the winter hasn't even started yet, but I'm already excited about hockey in June. ◆

ABOUT A GUY

THE STAR OF NBC'S UPCOMING ABOUT A BOY TALKS ABOUT ANGST AND KISSING AMANDA PEET

BOSTON NATIVE DAVID WALTON, 35, WILL STAR IN THE NBC series About a Boy, based on the Nick Hornby book and film, in February. Born and raised in Chestnut Hill, he graduated from St. Paul's School and studied acting at Brown University. Perhaps best known for playing the evil boyfriend Dr. Rick in the cult comedy film Fired Up!, he recently wrapped Think Like a Man Too and is set to star in the indie movie Break Point. On the small screen, he starred in series like Bent, Cracking Up, Heist and Perfect Couples. He lives with his wife, Majandra Delfino, and daughter in L.A. They're expecting a second child this month.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What do you miss most about Boston?
DAVID WALTON: The summer and fall. But then right after Christmas I start not to miss it so much.

Who does your eyebrows? [Laughs] God does. I don't touch them. You can inspect them under a microscope if you don't believe me.

You have pretty significant hair. Do you think you get cast because of it? If I shaved my head, I'd never work again.

You've starred in five TV series that got cancelled. How does that make you feel? I've been on so many canceled shows it's become a joke. The most famous actor who's had more is George Clooney. I think I have about four more pilots to tie with him, and that's my goal.

At some point, the tide's gotta turn. I think it has. I'm on a good horse. I think About a Boy is it.

You play the Hugh Grant character? Yes, but I haven't seen it. I read the book, but I intentionally avoided the movie because I didn't want to be influenced. I wanted a fresh, original take on things.

So is Zac Efron a good kisser? Umm... I don't... Wait! I was in Heist with Zac Efron! It's actually a funny story. The creators of that show were Robb and Mark Cullen, and they had no idea who Zac Efron was. There were two pizza delivery guys in the script, and one of them got blown up in a bank heist, and the other kid came back on episode two. They just flipped a coin to see who would get blown up, and it was Zac Efron. So they air the episode without realizing he's this massive Disney star, and all these tweens and little girls tuned in to see their idol get blown to smithereens. There was this huge backlash. And yeah, I kissed him after he got blown up.

Online, you get referred to as "a hot geek" and "adorkable." Thoughts? Then I guess that's why I was Zooey Deschanel's boyfriend on New Girl, 'cause I thought her character was a dork.

Who do people confuse you for? I get Jim Carrey. I get C. Thomas Howell all the time. And, most recently—which is really, really great—the boyfriend on Modern Family. The kid's like 17.

Actor who intimidated you the most? Jeffrey Tambor, who played my dad in Bent. He's completely easygoing, but he's so no-bulls--- that he cowed me the first day. We were on set, and a grip or someone in the crew said to me, "Hey man, I just wanted to introduce myself." I was like, "I'm David! Great to meet you!" And afterward, I looked over at Tambor, and he said, "You are so full of s---. You weren't that excited to meet him."

"I intentionally avoided the movie because I didn't want to be influenced."

Actor you admire the most? Anthony Hopkins.

How did your parents feel about you using your St. Paul's and Ivy League education to become an actor? I'm still not talking to my dad. Just kidding. They saw me perform at Brown, and I think they were very surprised that I thought I could do it professionally. [Laughs] But every time I land a job, there's an extra dose of amazement from them.

Is there anything good about Concord, N.H.? The taxi company. At St. Paul's, we'd call a taxi and they'd get us booze.

Ever been diagnosed with Cerebral St. Paulsy? Yes. Anyone who's smoked too much pot or done too much acid probably has it. The symptoms are slurred speech, a glazed look in the eyes, inability to follow conversations, poor motor skills... Just kidding! I do alumni work for St. Paul's. It's an exemplary school.

So you were Dr. Rick in Fired Up! Yup. Probably the most popular thing I've ever done. Whenever I see 15-year-olds staring over at me, they've invariably seen Fired Up! like 20 times.

Is Amanda Peet a good kisser? She is. I usually black out during all my onscreen kisses, but I'm pretty sure the answer is yes.

You went to the British American Drama Academy. Do you now say things like "lit-ruhlly" and "the loo"? Yeah. I'll be like, "I've got to go find my toreh in the gahrajh." Seriously, I did a show called Bent, which in British slang means gay, so all my friends from there thought I was doing a gay show.

Biggest thing you took away from your years at Brown? That underwater basket weaving is a great major.

Best thing about Providence? You can leave your wallet on top of your car outside an Italian restaurant, and it won't get stolen.

Role you were born to play? I would say the lead role in the biopic about porn legend Peter North. Or playing C. Thomas Howell's son in Soul Man II.

Biggest shock to your system upon moving to L.A.? The lack of seasons combined with the breast-augmentation situation.

Role you didn't get but you could have done it better? I thought Al Pacino in Godfather I and II kinda came up short. I don't understand why I didn't get that part. I nailed that audition.

Biggest lie you ever told to land a part? That I was a good kisser.

Best personality trait? Probably my ability to tap into a deep reservoir of anger and existential angst.

When will you be on the cover of Vanity Fair? When does their next issue come out? You guys better publish this quickly. ◆

Pass On THE TURKEY

Celebrity chefs share recipes for holiday feasts that skip the boring bird.

BY Andrew Rimas

PHOTOGRAPHED BY Brian Samuels

Fair is fowl, and fowl is excellent fare.
Except for the traditional roast turkey.

YOU SIMPLY GET MORE BANG FROM A DUCK
OR A PORK RACK. OR SEA BASS.

To say nothing of a stuffed cabbage with porcini mushrooms and chestnuts. Turkey's a fine vehicle for gravy, and its contribution to sandwich culture is legendary, but it lacks main-course magnetism. We asked four celebrity chefs—Jody Adams, Tiffani Faison, Jeremy Sewall and Lydia Shire—to come up with festive alternatives to the standard holiday roast.

WHOLE BLACK SEA BASS with STEAMED BAY SCALLOPS and SWEET AND SOUR PEPPERS

"There's no difference between a whole fish and whole turkey," Jeremy Sewall says. "It's meant to be shared." Although black bass can be replaced with bronzini, small red snappers or dorade, right now it's in season. "They're really plump this time of year from fattening up over the summer. It has a little sweetness and earthiness to it." Peppers, too, are still in season, so you get a lot of bright flavors in this dish. Note that the scallops can be swapped for littlenecks.

INGREDIENTS

1 b[illegible]
[illegible]
4 red bell pe[illegible]
1 large s[illegible]
1 clove g[illegible]
1 tab[illegible]poon [illegible]
2 table[illegible]sp[illegible]r
2 table[illegible]po[illegible]
[illegible] cup vege[illegible]
1 cup rice flour
1 tablespoon chives, [illegible]ced
Salt and pepper t[illegible]
Canola oil f[illegible]r fry[illegible]g

DIRECTIONS:

Sweet and sour peppers: may be made a day a[illegible]d Roast and peel the peppers. Remove the seeds and cut into un[illegible]rm [illegible]ze. Warm the olive oil and sweat the garlic and shallots until they begin to color lightly. Add the peppers, vinegar, sugar and vegetable stock, let simmer for five minutes and remove from the he[illegible]t.

Bass: Have your fi[illegible]monger remove gills and any scales from the fish. All of the fins should be trimmed down with scissors. Just before cook[illegible], cut three lines in one side of the fish that go deep into the flesh. Heat canola oil to 350 degrees in a pan large enough to have the fish completely submerged in the oil. Roll the fish in the rice flour and carefully drop into the oil. The fish will cook in about 8 minutes. Remove to paper towel and drain. Season well with salt and pepper.

To serve: While the fish is frying, warm the pepper mixture in a covered pan with the bay scallops until the scallops open; season with salt and pepper. In a large serving bowl, place the peppers in the center with the scallops around the outside. Place the fish in the center so it is standing up, sprinkle with chives and serve.

PORK RACK BRAISED in MILK with FRESH CORIANDER and DRIED CORIANDER SEED

LYDIA SHIRE SCAMPO

Lydia Shire swears that the pork chops at Scampo are the best in the city. "I'm not an egotistical person who'd say that," she adds. "We buy our pork from Heritage Foods USA.... They have the best pork in the world. The Berkshire variety is grown for flavor, tenderness and fat quality. We hand-cut our own chops and leave the fat on." She serves this recipe for pork rack at Thanksgiving alongside the bird. ("My husband is from Colombia and does not like turkey.")

INGREDIENTS:

Sugarcane Marinade:
- ½ cup pure olive oil
- 1 tablespoon fresh ginger, peeled and chopped
- 4 shallots, peeled and chopped
- 1 teaspoon cumin seed, crushed
- 1 teaspoon turmeric
- 2 limes, juiced
- 1 bunch cilantro, washed and stems removed
- 2 tablespoons coriander seeds, crushed
- 3 stalks of lemongrass (bottom 4 inches only), thinly sliced
- 3 fresh Thai chilies or jalapenos, seeds removed and chopped
- ½ teaspoon fennel seed, crushed
- 2 bay leaves
- 1 cup sugarcane juice or ½ block of raw brown-sugar paste found in Asian markets
- 1 bunch scallions, washed and cut into rounds

Pork (six servings):
- "10 bone" Berkshire pork rack from a quality butcher like Heritage Foods USA
- 2 cups Spanish yellow onion cut into large dice
- 1/3 cup pure olive oil (not extra-virgin)
- 1 cup chardonnay wine
- 2 cups heavy cream
- 2 cups whole milk
- 2 lemons, with the rind thinly peeled off with no trace of white pith showing
- 2 cups sugarcane marinade
- Sea salt and freshly ground pepper
- Extra cilantro sprigs and hydroponic watercress for garnish
- A few radish slices, thinly cut with a mandolin or by hand

DIRECTIONS:

Sugarcane Marinade: Gently heat oil in sauce pan; add ginger, lemongrass, coriander seed, shallots and chilies. Cook over medium heat for approximately three to four minutes. Add spices and bay leaves. Cook for two more minutes until fragrant. Add lime juice and sugarcane juice or sugar paste. Simmer and reduce by half. Remove and cool.

Pork: Wipe the whole pork rack dry with paper towels. Place on a half sheet-pan and cover with 2 cups of the sugarcane marinade. Let sit out for 2 hours.

- Set oven to 325 degrees.
- In a large roaster with lid off, saute the onions in the oil until soft and just beginning to turn golden. Place the pork rack inside the hot pan. Use all the marinade on top. Deglaze with the chardonnay. Let reduce for two minutes; then add both the milk and cream. Reduce again for two minutes. Throw in the lemon peel, and add a tablespoon of sea salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste. Once the whole mixture has come to a simmer, place covered in the preheated oven.
- Braise for approximately 45 minutes to one hour, or until a meat thermometer registers 145 degrees when inserted into the center of the pork, not touching a bone.
- Monitor the liquid content. Should it become too reduced (too thick), add ½ cup of water to reconstitute.
- Once the pork is done, lift it out gingerly, place it on a platter or cutting board and let it rest loosely covered in tented foil for 20 minutes while you strain the sauce.
- Place a colander in a large bowl. This will strain only the big pieces out while leaving in much of the pulp and flavor. Adjust any seasoning at this time. Slice the pork roast into the desired pieces and nap with sauce. Don't hide all the insides of the beautifully cooked pork; let that pink show. Scatter the pork and sauce with a beautiful mix of cilantro sprigs, hydroponic watercress leaves and thin radish slices.

STUFFED CABBAGE with FARRO, MUSHROOMS, CHESTNUTS and SQUASH

JODY ADAMS RIALTO, TRADE

"Everybody has a memory of stuffed cabbage," Jody Adams says. "My mother's was ground beef, white rice, herbs, tomato sauce. I'm sure she got it from* The New York Times Cookbook.*" This dish, using farro and mushrooms, is a far cry from the Eastern European cliche. "Vegetables benefit from slow cooking at this time of year," Adams says. "At Rialto, we always have a vegetarian main course option, like pasta or a deconstructed eggplant parm. People like the variety. The chestnuts in this make it taste like holiday."

INGREDIENTS:

1 head Savoy cabbage, about 1¾ pounds
Kosher salt
½ ounce dried porcini mushrooms
1 cup dried farro
1 cup vegetable stock or water
2 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
1 medium onion, cut into ¼-inch dice, about ¾ cup
¼ pound mushrooms, cleaned, stemmed (if necessary) and cut into ¼-inch dice
¼ pound chestnuts, chopped and peeled
¼ pound winter squash, cut into ¼-inch dice (weigh after dicing)
¼ cup sherry, marsala or white wine
¼ cup parsley, chopped
½ cup grated Parmigiano Reggiano, plus additional cheese for garnishing
2 cups tomato sauce

DIRECTIONS:

- Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil. Add the whole cabbage, weighing it down with a sieve and something heavy to keep the head submerged. Cook five minutes or until the outer leaves are tender. Scoop out the head and put it on a sheet pan (with sides) to collect excess water. Using kitchen shears, snip off the tender outer leaves. Return the head to the pot and repeat until you have 16 leaves.

- Soak the porcini in ½ cup warm water for 15 minutes. When they are tender and pliable, transfer them to the counter and check to be sure they aren't sandy, particularly at the bottom of the stem. Remove any sandy bits. Chop the mushrooms.

- Pour the porcini water into a pot, taking care not to disturb the layer of grit and sediment in the bottom of the soaking container. If you're apprehensive, use a coffee filter to strain it. Add the stock or water and bring to a boil over medium-high heat.

- Put the dried farro in a strainer and rinse under running water.

- Add the rinsed farro and a pinch of salt to the pot with boiling stock, reduce the heat to low, cover and cook until the farro is just tender and all the liquid has been absorbed, about 25 minutes. It should be slightly underdone. Allow to cool.

- Heat the olive oil in a saute pan over medium heat. Add the onions and cook until tender, about five minutes. Add chopped raw mushrooms, chestnuts and squash, season with salt and pepper, and cook until mushrooms have released their juices, about five minutes. Increase the heat to medium-high and cook for three to four minutes or until the vegetables start to sear.

- Add the porcini and wine. Let the wine reduce to a glaze. Remove from the heat and allow to cool.

- Add the mushroom mixture, parsley and grated cheese to the farro, and mix well. Taste and adjust seasonings. Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

- Cut the thick cores from the cabbage leaves and lay them out on a cutting board. Put a heaping ¼ cup of the farro mixture in the center of each leaf. Roll the leaves, tucking in the sides, and transfer to a baking dish, flap-side down. The dish should be large enough to hold 16 cabbage bundles. Cover the dish with a round of parchment, tucking in the edges, and bake for 20 minutes.

- Remove and discard the parchment paper. Spoon the tomato sauce over the cabbage and bake for an additional 15–20 minutes. Allow to repose for five minutes, sprinkle with grated cheese and serve.

HONEY MISO DUCK

TIFFANI FAISON SWEET CHEEKS Q

The trinity of duck, observes Tiffani Faison, is fat, skin and flesh. And the tricky part is cooking all three properly. "You have to allow the fat to render," she says. "It has to melt into the flesh of the animal." For her fowl alternative to turkey, Faison wanted something approachable, "where people wouldn't set their houses on fire." This recipe enhances the meat's natural flavors with a glaze and ginger puree. Faison's trick to keeping it juicy: place a pan of liquid at the bottom of the oven to moisten the heat.

INGREDIENTS:

- 1 Hudson Valley duck, available at Savenor's
- ½ cup honey
- 1 cup white shiro miso
- ¼ cup light soy sauce

Gravy:
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 1 pound fresh ginger, peeled and thinly sliced
- ¼ cup fresh garlic, chopped
- 2 cups Spanish onion, chopped
- 1 small jar orange marmalade
- 1 cup light soy sauce
- 3 quarts chicken stock

DIRECTIONS:

- Allow the duck to completely defrost in the refrigerator the night before.
- Preheat oven to 300 degrees. Make sure you have an internal thermometer in your oven (don't trust that dial!). Remove all organs in the cavity of the duck.
- Bring a large stock pot of heavily salted water to a boil. Dunk the duck in the boiling water for one minute, or until skin firms significantly. Remove the duck and pat completely dry.
- Place a roasting pan full of water and any aromatics of your choice (wine, orange slices, herbs, etc.) in the bottom of your oven.
- Combine honey, white miso, and light soy sauce. Slather the duck in this glaze and place in preheated oven on a rack set over the pan. Cover the duck with aluminum foil.
- Roast the duck for 45 minutes, covered, and brush the glaze on intermittently. While the duck is roasting, make sure the roasting pan stays full of liquid.
- Remove foil from the duck and increase oven temperature to 350 degrees. Roast for another 15 to 20 minutes until skin is dark brown, making sure it doesn't burn.
- Remove the duck from the oven and allow it to rest for 20 minutes before carving.
- For the gravy, sweat the ginger, garlic and onion in the butter until translucent. Add the remaining ingredients and reduce to 1/3 original volume. Place all ingredients in a blender in batches, blending until smooth. Season to taste. If it's a little too rich, add a splash of champagne vinegar.

How to build the perfect home bar

In the true spirit of the season, we asked a handful of the city's finest bartenders to prescribe the essentials for an ideal home bar: spirits, glassware, mixers and utensils. Rather than filling a wish list with Pappy Van Winkle and Camus XO, we asked for practical picks accessible to the amateur mixologist. "Stocking your own bar should never be about one-upmanship," counsels Tyler Jay Wang, lead bartender at Somerville's Kirkland Tap & Trotter. "More expensive rarely signifies better. Sure, you can go all out on esoteric cordials and amaros or the fanciest handmade Japanese bar tools, but never skimp on your liquor. A great bar is about options, not grandeur."

Better to be basic and certain than exotic and unsure. "First thing first is streamline," advises Devin Adams, a trained sommelier who now tends bar at the Fort Point booze Mecca, Drink. "Over the years too much money has been spent on trendy products that take up space, unused, especially in our small city apartments. Keep a small effective arsenal of spirits you trust and enjoy. We all have the ability to take a test run at the local bar and figure out if it's worth dropping $50 or more on the newest craft spirit."

"BEWARE OF BUYING BLINDLY," HE CAUTIONS. "IT CAN BE DISAPPOINTING AND EXPENSIVE."

AMBER ALERT

Within the broad category of whiskey are bourbon, rye and Tennessee-, Irish- and Canadian-style whiskeys, as well as Scotch whisky. Says Adams: Old Overholt gets the most nods for rye on account of its ability to mix well in drinks like old fashioneds, Manhattans and sazeracs. "What you want is spicy and not crazy expensive rye whiskey," says Wang, who personally favors Rittenhouse. Adds Gold—an Old Overholt fan—"I occasionally go for Rittenhouse if I'm just having one drink because it's 100 proof. And if money were no object and availability no issue, my fave upper-end ryes would be Sazerac 18 and the Van Winkle Reserve rye, 13 year." Wang adds Bulleit to the splurge category. Sheridan favors Midleton Very Rare in the Irish category.

Lagavulin (the 16-year variety) takes the title for Scotch among our pros for "sipping contemplatively," as Wang puts it, while Pierre Ferrand products bear the standard for cognac. "Fantastic spirits with a great pedigree and reasonable pricing," Wang says. But keep an eye on D'USSÉ, the Bacardi entry that is said to be Jay-Z's pop of choice, which is coming on strong, says Emonds.

CLEAR AND PRESENT

Moving to more clear, and definitely present, dangers, vodka—the dowager of the drinking set—is still the most ordered spirit in town these days, but waning in panache. (That's what happens when you add chocolate to martinis.) Of the vodkas, Tito's earned the laurels, especially, as Emonds points out, because it's gluten-free (as is Cold River, a comer, he says, made from Maine potatoes). To really perk up your trend quotient, add a bottle of Boyd & Blair, a boutique potato vodka that even Richard, who doesn't regularly drink vodka—and doesn't stock it in her home bar—recommends for its "flavorful, luscious texture."

For gin, Beefeater was nearly unanimous. "It's timeless and delicious," says Wang, who makes heavy use of the juniper gem. "When money is no object, buy a New World style, like Hendrick's, but if you really want to wow your friends, check out St. George's Terroir Gin, or CapRock Ransom Gin made from apples. And then invest in an Old Tom–style gin, like Ransom's from Oregon. After that, look into Jenever and aged options. The opportunities never end." Richard has high praise for Small's, a boutique dry-style offering, as well as aromatic import Monkey 47. "It's from Germany and probably the best gin I've ever tasted."

SOUTHERN COMFORTS

Tequila and mezcal are so complex, they demand less their own book than their own encyclopedia. But to summarize: "Mezcal: sip it, don't shoot it," Wang urges. "Look for single-village mezcals made by the artisans of Oaxaca. Buy Del Maguey Vida for your starter bar. Minero, Tobala and Pechuga will bring the luxury." Milagro tequilas are also excellent, say the experts, and less pricey than the Del Magueys, which can run up to $80 a bottle.

Matusalem was a favorite rum (Gold picks Matusalem Platino for daiquiris and Barbancourt 8 "for mixing as well as drinking solo"). Wang suggests Privateer's Silver Reserve Rum for his daiquiris and "a rich confectionary rum like Diplomático Reserva Ron from Venezuela" for an aged sipper.

CORDIALLY YOURS

Barebones liqueurs are dry vermouth (Noilly Prat), sweet vermouth (Carpano Antica) and Campari. Vermouth, a fortified wine, has a shelf life of about a week. Refrigeration doesn't really help, so buy small amounts and consider a purchase a grand reason to invite friends over for martinis or Manhattans.

If budget permits, invest in Cointreau, Combien (another triple sec), Chartreuse (green or yellow), Maraschino, Bénédictine and Lustau Amontillado. (For good measure, and good digestion, add a bottle of Angostura or Peychaud's bitters.) To Sheridan, who adds Baileys to the liqueurs, the pleasure is "not based on popular demand or pure mixology but a reflection of kinship with the spirit associated with special times."

"A home bar can and should be very simple," Richard says. "One can do so much with few ingredients. Cognac with rum is a great base for holiday punches, and all sorts of martini and Manhattan variants can be made with the vermouths and bitters."

SUCCESSFUL MIXERS

Buy club soda and tonic water in small bottles. You can make and refrigerate a simple syrup (sugar and water) or infuse flavors (mint, maple syrup, peach, etc.) as you like. Ideally, use fresh fruit, not bottles or mixes, although a bottle of fresh orange and/or grapefruit juice is forgivable. Purchase unstuffed olives and real cherries (Luxardo makes wonderful wizened dark ones).

When it comes to accompaniments, "Don't be cheap with the ice," Adams says. "Pick up some of those big ice cube molds; Tovolo makes great ones. Go home, put an oversized ice cube in a glass, measure out a negroni, pour over ice cube, mix it with your finger if you want—no one's judging. Pure simplicity: a glass, a piece of ice, a jigger."

INVEST IN HARDWARE

For jiggers, Adams recommends an OXO steel angled type. (OXO makes good juicers, too.) The Boston Shaker in Somerville's Davis Square offers one-stop shopping for these and items like a Hawthorne strainer (which fits inside the rim of the shaker), and the eponymous container sells for about $15 and "lasts forever," Wang says. While some bartenders go with the glass-inside-metal shaker, others believe the metal on metal makes colder drinks. Don't forget a good metal corkscrew and a small, sharp knife for lemon peel.

Katherine "Kat" Lamp at the Boston Shaker prescribes a full "essentials" kit (about $65) that would include a long spoon, an OXO strainer (Hawthorne), a professional-quality Boston shaker, a "Julep" standard strainer, an Endurance double jigger, a Kuhn Rikon peeler and a Fletcher's Mill maple muddler. While not exactly "equipment," she also recommends stocking a Hella Bitter salt-and-pepper pack, which is actually two small bottles of aromatic and citrus bitters. "The citrus is warm and robust, with distinct caramel notes, and can be used wherever you would use an orange bitters—but can go where many orange bitters fear to tread. An excellent combination," Lamp says.

Glasses, pitchers, stirrers and trays can all be found in profusion at secondhand stores. Don't hesitate to mix and match glasses— martini, red and white wine, rocks, highball, pint, pilsner, snifter and tulip, as Sheridan enumerates. But you should be able to accommodate at least half your anticipated guests if they all ask for the same kind of drink.

Basically, wing it. "Hit Goodwill, often," Adams says. "With diligence, the amount of great glassware and mixing pitchers you'll find for 99 cents is unbelievable. You don't need matching sets of glassware for cocktails. Have some fun, like we do at Drink, and hand-select a glass. Sometimes a glass that reflects a guest's mood or personality gives more pleasure than the actual cocktail inside." ◆

THE PERFECT $200 Case of Wine

We asked Don Ackerman of Brookline Liquor Mart to confect a case of red and white varietals, for under $200 total. Here are his choices (two bottles each):

2012 DR. FISCHER OCKFENER BOCKSTEIN RIESLING KABINETT

A long name, but a wine with a touch of sweetness—perfect for when someone drops in or when you have Chinese or Thai delivered.

2011 MONTINORE GEWÜRZTRAMINER

2011 VERGET TERRES DE PIERRES MÂCON-VILLAGES

This is a versatile chardonnay, and you need to have some chardonnay hanging around for guests who think it's the only white wine worth drinking.

2011 BOUCHARD PÈRE & FILS BOURGOGNE PINOT NOIR

This is an easy sipper and a versatile choice for many dishes.

2010 BEDELL MERLOT

Long Island makes great merlot, and this is another versatile choice for pairing and easy sipping on its own.

2009 CHATEAU SAINT SULPICE BORDEAUX

When the weather turns colder, your thoughts should turn to Bordeaux to accompany that steak or roast.

PERFORMING ARTS

CHARITY CASE

In The After-Dinner Joke, charity is a laughing matter. The satire follows an idealistic secretary named Selby as she leaves her job at a large corporation to work at the company's nonprofit arm, only to discover that philanthropy can be as dirty a business as politics. Through a whimsical journey reminiscent of Alice in Wonderland, she meets more than 60 lively characters—played by Whistler in the Dark Theatre's cast of just five actors—and quickly learns that doing good is easier said than done. Originally written by British playwright Caryl Churchill as a 1978 teleplay, The After-Dinner Joke gets a live staging through Nov. 24 at the Charlestown Working Theater. Hannah Weintraub

WHIP IT Booby traps, boulders and snakes may seem like odd trappings for a birthday bash, but that's what's on the agenda for the Brattle's centennial celebration of Douglas Slocombe. The 100-year-old cinematographer logged 84 feature films during his long career, and none are wilder rides than Raiders of the Lost Ark, for which he teamed up with Steven Spielberg and George Lucas to create one of the highest-grossing films of all time. The Indiana Jones series' first installment follows Harrison Ford's brave and brawny character as he hunts for the Ark of the Covenant and fights off Nazi enemies. Jump into the jungle with the help of Slocombe's sure-handed cinematography Dec. 1 and 3 at the Brattle Theatre. / Coryn Doncaster

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

All Is Lost ★★★★ Breathtaking in its simplicity, this riveting tale of survival at sea stars Robert Redford, a leaky boat...and that's pretty much that. Conveniently rebuking the banal Screenwriting 101 character notes and clunky symbolism that dragged Gravity down to Earth, writer-director J.C. Chandor's sophomore effort stars Redford as a nameless sailor, alone on the Indian Ocean when his yacht is struck by a stray storage container. What follows is wordless problem-solving with endless resourcefulness, as things rapidly proceed from bad to worse. The 77-year-old Sundance kid delivers a performance of expert physicality, devoid of dialogue save for a couple of SOS calls and one marvelously cathartic expletive. Redford brings his five decades of stardom to the fore. He's so magnetic, yet at times shockingly frail, you can't take your eyes off him. Chandor's unfussy direction remains focused on the tasks at hand, allowing viewers space to forge their own allegorical interpretations. Alternating between white-knuckle suspense and ghostly contemplation, All Is Lost is a spellbinding exercise in pure cinema. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Blue Is the Warmest Color ★★★★ First love's seismic qualities have seldom been captured with such immersive abandon as in Abdellatif Kechiche's Cannes Film Festival Palme D'Or winner, a 179-minute sprawl of heartbreak shot on a vast, widescreen panorama that scarcely strays six inches from a young woman's face. Blue Is the Warmest Color charts the ardent sexual awakening and eventual crushing despair of Adèle (Adèle Exarchopoulos). She's a book-smart working-class teenager who can already tell things aren't clicking with her boyfriend, when one day she's gobsmacked by the sight of butch, blue-haired Emma (Léa Seydoux). What follows is a rapturous exploration, rendered in giddy, almost impossibly shallow-focus close-ups that make the rest of the world go away, plus a few superheroic sex scenes. Exarchopoulos' performance is something of a miracle, with every raw, unfiltered feeling rippling across that yearning, expressive face. Kechiche's camera never flinches, filming a fairly familiar coming-of-age tale as if through a microscope, the proximity pumping up emotions to a point where everything feels like it's happening for the very first time. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville, West Newton.)

Blue Jasmine ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature became a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At Coolidge Corner, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Captain Phillips ★★★ 1/2 In April 2009, the cargo freighter Maersk Alabama was hijacked by four Somali pirates. Unable to control the ship, they fled in a lifeboat, holding Capt. Richard Phillips for ransom. Before reaching shore, a team of Navy SEALs put an abrupt end to the hostage negotiations. Director Paul Greengrass' harrowing, bluntly titled Captain Phillips is a tricky picture with a lot on its mind, at times both pulse-pounding and deeply mournful. It reminded me of Zero Dark Thirty in the way it rewires action-movie conventions to remove any trace of triumphalism, and manages to keep you on the edge of your seat even though everybody already knows the ending. The final scenes are overpowering, with Greengrass mercilessly tightening the suspense screws as Tom Hanks fearlessly goes to emotional places we've never seen in his entire career. It's a brutal knockout of an ending, bold enough to leave you with the nagging impression that good hasn't conquered evil so much as a few mosquitoes have been swatted. This film sticks in your gut. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Carrie ★ I suppose if someone absolutely had to undertake the fool's errand of remaking Brian De Palma's lurid 1976 psychosexual classic, there are worse choices than director Kimberly Peirce, who so sensitively chronicled the tragic tale of a transgender teen in 1999's Boys Don't Cry. Alas, you'll find little of Peirce's outsider empathy in this shockingly cheap-looking knockoff. Stephen King's original story is so hilariously overloaded with metaphor—a teenage girl's burgeoning sexuality manifests itself as destructive supernatural power—De Palma's over-ripe phantasmagoria is probably the only sane way to go. Peirce pays lip service to social-media bullying, but Chloë Grace Moretz's Carrie White is far too poised to summon much sympathy. As Carrie's crazy mom, Julianne Moore reprises her Sarah Palin performance to little effect, and a finale that should be horrifying plays more like an audition for the next X-Men movie. The most ineptly assembled studio picture I've seen in years, Carrie is so incompetently staged that I actually found myself laughing out loud at a fake sunset. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Dallas Buyers Club ★★★ 1/2 In the most miraculous career resurrection not precipitated by Quentin Tarantino, Matthew McConaughey has abruptly transformed himself from shirtless rom-com himbo to an expertly sleazy, electrifying screen presence. These days he's exuding an infectiously naughty sense of self-delight that serves him well in director Jean-Marc Vallée's somewhat schematic and a bit too crowd-pleasing take on the early days of the AIDS crisis. McConaughey, starved to an alarming fraction of his body weight, stars as a hard-partying boy diagnosed with HIV and given 30 days to live. Never one to follow protocol, he starts out buying stolen AZT from crooked hospital orderlies in parking lots and eventually ends up smuggling unapproved drugs across all sorts of borders in a variety of silly costumes as part of a rather ingenious entrepreneurial gambit. Craig Borten and Melisa Wallack's screenplay follows the template of every Bill Murray slobs vs. snobs comedy from the 1980s, except this time people are dying. Dallas Buyers Club is sometimes terribly overwritten yet always admirably underplayed. And McConaughey is just heroic. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Don Jon ★ Joseph Gordon-Levitt brings to his performances a sly, understated intelligence that often allows him to abscond with scenes out from under the noses of his more openly demonstrative co-stars. Which is all a roundabout way of saying it's a terrible idea to cast this guy as The Situation. Written and directed by the enterprising young actor, Don Jon is a barn-door-broad burlesque of Joisey stereotypes and holy-cannoli accents. Snapping gum and pulling faces as the title character, Gordon-Levitt stars as a neat-freak, fitness-obsessed lothario. This handsome bartender has an aversion to wearing shirts with sleeves; he's a dimwitted chick magnet, hooked on Internet porn. A compulsive masturbator with a penchant for flattened vowels, Jon scores most nights of the week, and then secretly retires to his living room and finishes himself off in front of the computer with a handful of Kleenex. Like most current indies, Don Jon is curiously devoid of subplots and struggles to barely crawl across the 90-minute mark. It's a silly vanity project from a young talent who should know better. (At Boston Common.)

Ender's Game ★★ The seminal 1985 science fiction novel by renowned loudmouth bigot Orson Scott Card gets a dutiful big-screen blow up from director Gavin Hood, who previously helmed that unwatchable first Wolverine movie. This is a sterile-looking vessel for overlong expository sequences, detailing a future world in which Earth has been attacked by angry alien arachnids and mankind's last hope for interstellar battle is an army of children, because they're better at video games or something. Hugo's Asa Butterfield stars as the brilliant prodigy molded into a baby sociopath by Harrison Ford's gruff Captain Graff. Ford and Viola Davis discuss the themes of the novel at great length, in case you need to write a paper on it for homework, while Butterfield and True Grit's Hailee Steinfeld play a lot of zero-gravity laser tag as practice. For those unfamiliar with Card's story, there's a jaw-dropping "I can't believe they went there" twist at the end that's such a thoughtful provocation it's almost worth sitting through all this dross to get there. Almost. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Enough Said ★★★½ A bittersweet farewell to the great James Gandolfini, this romance from writer-director Nicole Holofcener is funny, sad and wise about the crazy ways we torment ourselves in this thing called love. But unlike most synthetic rom-coms, Enough Said is uniquely attuned to the weary rhythms of middle age—it's about the surprise of finding someone when you've already been around the block a few times. Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a swank Los Angeles neighborhood. Gandolfini is the slovenly hunk who steals her heart. He's a big, slightly sad guy who seems to have settled for his lot in life years ago, but he's now surprised and delighted by the sudden arrival of this neurotic mess. Their chemistry is magic. She's all sharp right angles; he's a round Barcalounger Buddha. Louis-Dreyfus and Gandolfini's first date is one of the most purely pleasurable sequences I've seen this year, with two jaded, cautious people lowering their defenses and feeling each other out. Just lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Escape Plan ★★★ Arnold Schwarzenegger's brief cameos were the highlights of Sylvester Stallone's Expendables pictures, so it was only a matter of time until these former rivals got around to spending more than a few minutes together onscreen. Cheerfully preposterous and proudly low-rent, director Mikael Håfström's endearingly junky meat-and-potatoes throwback coasts on the chemistry of its co-stars. Sly stars an escape artist who works as the "resident Houdini" for a private security firm, but runs out of luck when he's cut off from his support team and trapped in a quasi-futuristic CIA black site that looks like a cheaply decorated Hollywood soundstage. Our hero's only hope is a suspiciously friendly detainee, magnificently named Emil Rottmayer and played with contagious self-delight by Schwarzenegger. The Italian Stallion graciously hands the movie over to the Governator, rolling his eyes while his sidekick indulges in all manner of giddy vulgarities and wannabe catchphrases. Ah-nald hasn't been this much fun in decades. For some viewers, that will be more than enough. Your personal mileage may vary. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gravity ★★★ Alfonso Cuarón's first film since 2006's Children of Men is a technical astonishment, and it's easy to see why it's been five years in the making. Gravity is first and foremost a wonder to watch, demanding to be seen on the largest screen possible. As a technological milestone, Gravity is astounding. As a movie, it's pretty OK. Sandra Bullock and George Clooney star as astronauts stranded in space after a terrifying hailstorm of Russian satellite debris makes a mess of their mission. Gravity is for all intents and purposes a computer-animated movie, with actual photography of the actors' heads stuck in the middle of the most photorealistic CGI that I have ever seen. But then about halfway through, Gravity decides it needs to be "about" something. Yet the thunderous banality of this screenplay cannot detract from the accomplishment of Cuarón's filmmaking. I've honestly never seen anything like it, the rootless camera so indifferent to the characters, inviting us to just dwell for a bit in the vast, airless emptiness of space. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Jackass Presents: Bad Grandpa ★★ 1/2 After taking a bow with 2010's gasp-inducing, oddly valedictory Jackass 3D, Johnny Knoxville and some of the boys behind the scenes are back with this feature-length adventure of Irving Zisman. Long a staple of their repertoire, this drunken, potty-mouthed old man is actually Knoxville under heavy prosthetics, horrifying innocent bystanders with his aberrant behavior. The stunts are inspired; less so is the storyline in which Zisman takes a road trip with his precocious, up-for-anything grandson, played by a game Jackson Nicoll. I've always adored these Jackass shenanigans and the gang's surrealist spirit. At best they are a modern Three Stooges for dudes who drink during the day, but tethering them to a conventional narrative structure doesn't pay off in the end. Sure, it's a blast to watch Knoxville soil himself, disrupt funerals and coax unsuspecting folks into committing crimes, but this sort of humor plays best as quick blackout sketches. Bad Grandpa feels kind of like watching an old porno, zoning out during the "plot" while you're waiting for the good stuff. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

WINNER BOSTON'S BEST 2013

Michael Douglas, Robert De Niro, Morgan Freeman and Kevin Kline star as childhood friends in Sin City for one last bachelor party. Douglas' aging lothario aims to finally tie the knot with a bimbo half his age, much to the consternation of the teasing geezers in his entourage. Don't expect any Hangover-styled hijinks, as these four not-so-bad grandpas stroll through a few family-friendly, mildly amusing comic interludes largely predicated upon product placement and the gang's antiquated notions of Rat Pack cool. Douglas gamely sends up his spray-tanned vanity, making eyes at Mary Steenburgen's sassy lounge singer. Freeman busts some surprising moves on the dance floor, Kline shoulders the film's blessedly few Viagra jokes and De Niro acts a bit more alert than his late-career somnambulist standard. It's a cast of relaxed old pros with easy chemistry, all of whom seem to be having a great deal of fun. The feeling is almost mutual. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★½ A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At West Newton.)

Thor: The Dark World ★½ At least 60 percent of Thor: The Dark World consists of characters frantically running around trying to explain the plot to each other, hurling monster-sized gobs of exposition regarding the increasingly arbitrary rules of this fantasy universe. Everything works until it doesn't. And then it does again. You can do something until you can't anymore, but then later you can again. Some people die and stay dead. Others get to come back, if they're popular enough with test-screening audiences. Eventually I threw up my hands, accepting that literally anything could happen at any given moment. As the cast wallows in tedious mythological explaining in front of kitschy CGI backdrops, you realize this has more in common with the Star Wars prequels than just Natalie Portman. The semi-apocalyptic claptrap is rendered almost unwatchably murky by yet another cheap 3-D post-conversion, but the only moments that linger in the memory are throwaway human gestures like Chris Hemsworth's Thor hanging his hammer on a coat rack, or politely catching a ride on a crowded subway. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

JERSEY BOYS (AND GIRLS) The Jersey Shore may be portrayed as full of fist-pumping meatheads, but it's not all thumpa-thumpa club beats. It's also the home base of River City Extension, a standout among the recent plethora of folk rock bands. Having earned praise with last year's sophomore album, Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Your Anger, RCE is charging ahead with Deliverance, a new release due early next year. Frontman Joe Michelini is also updating an active Tumblr that includes a list of things about Boston that he doesn't like ("I don't live there") and loves ("Walking around you"). Edited by Sarah Hagman

A SHOT IN THE DARK Signs at construction sites often ask us to pardon their appearance. Phillip Jones sees no need for apologies. His current exhibition captures changes in the urban landscape in black-and-white photographs, shot mostly at night. Influenced by photographers like Bill Brandt, Alfred Steiglitz and Brassai and with a TV and film background, Jones uses unexpected vantage points to highlight the raw beauty of industry and architecture in transition, from the Boston skyline to Il Vittoriano in Rome. Get a new view on city life through Dec. 20 at the New England School of Photography's Garner Center. Hannah Brown

LOVE OF THE GAME

For 35 million sports junkies, managing a team of pro athletes requires only a computer and passion for the game. Matthew Berry turned that hobby into a career—and the subject of his new book. In Fantasy Life: The Outrageous, Uplifting and Heartbreaking World of Fantasy Sports from the Guy Who's Lived It, ESPN's senior fantasy sports analyst chronicles the rise of fantasy sports from cultish nerds to mainstream pop culture. Earning praise as a New York Times best-seller, Fantasy Life weaves together stories of lavish drafts, tragically lost bets, 11th-hour trades and exuberant moments of a modern American pastime. Uncover the reality behind fantasy sports on Nov. 22 at the Brattle Theatre. / Daniel Petersen

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors. It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

MUSIC TO THEIR EARS

Jane and Charlie Abrahams at the Women's Lunch Place's Spaghetti Dinner

Gregg Sorensen at Boston Baroque's 40th anniversary party

A MATTER OF PERSPECTIVE

Seeing Yo-Yo Ma play at Symphony Hall is always a treat, but when it's to raise money for a good cause, it's a no-brainer.

The Terezin Music Foundation, which honors the musical legacy of the composers who died during the Holocaust, held its annual gala, which began with a cocktail reception and continued with a concert featuring the Hawthorne String Quartet and two American premieres by composers Pablo Ortiz and Vit Zouhar. However, the highlight was undoubtedly when Ma was joined onstage by 90-something Holocaust survivor and pianist George Horner, who played pieces he had performed as an inmate at Theresienstadt.

There wasn't a dry eye in the house, which was packed to the rafters by big machers like honoree Gov. Deval Patrick, composer Osvaldo Golijov, celebrated filmmaker Juan Mandelbaum, the effervescent Cynthia Curme, mega arts patrons Paul and Katie Buttenwieser, the majestic Sandy Krakoff, über-do-gooder Nancy Korman, Boston Conservatory honcho Richard Ortner, restaurateur Jim Solomon and his mom, Marilyn Newman, music maven Joyce Linde, the soignée Sharon Rich, former governor Mike Dukakis and his prettier other half, Kitty, rock-star cardiologist Larry Cohn and his main squeeze, Roberta, the debonair Myles Slosberg with blond beauty Diane Krane, the flawless Karen Rotenberg with the dashing Michael, philanthropist extraordinaire Susan Kaplan and so on and so forth.

As one guest put it: "The arts scene in Boston would be pretty much screwed without everyone in this room."

After the concert came a celebratory dinner, at which this observation was overheard:

"Yo-Yo Ma taught me an ingenious way to make myself look taller this evening: Just stand next to the governor."

MANGIA!

Wednesday might be Prince Spaghetti Day in the North End, but for the Women's Lunch Place, the Spaghetti Dinner is an annual feast held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza.

To mark its 30th anniversary, the women's homeless shelter pulled out all the stops, hosting a cocktail reception in the Venetian Room, after which guests went into the ballroom to pig out on pasta.

Present and accounted for: honorees Hannah Grove and Michele and Howard Kessler, equestrian babe Sarah Monaco, real estate mack daddy Ken Tutunjian, Red Sox cheerleader Carolyn Casey, banking behemoth Joe Campanelli with brunette bombshell Carolyn, carb-loading triathlete Charlie Abrahams with his beautiful blond better half, Jane, Hizzonah Tom Menino and first lady Angela, son of a speaker man Tom O'Neill and his stunning wife, Shelly, insurance bigwig Anthony Leonard, board chair Michelle McGee and a boatload of equally dazzling others.

The tables were set with red-checked tablecloths and Chianti-bottle candlesticks. And whoever sat in the seat with the chef's toque and apron was obliged to serve everyone else at the table, which prompted several remarks along the lines of this: "The last time I served anyone dinner was sometime in the '70s."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the woman who was complimented on her diamond earrings and said, "That's what happens when you go to Hong Kong for the weekend."

GOING FOR BAROQUE

It's tough to turn 40 without looking like you need a bit of Botox, so it was nice to see Boston Baroque in such fine fettle as it celebrated its middle-aged milestone with a party at UpStairs on the Square.

Among the many music lovers on hand were artistic director Marty Pearlman, theatrical impresario Henry Lussier, librarian/violinist Amy Sims, Arts Boston head honcha Catherine Peterson, the smoldering handsome Gregg Sorensen, attorney-at-large Steve Weiner, the peripatetic Peter Wender, marketing guru Beth Marie Robinson, the effervescent Ann Heimlicher, hostesses with the mostesses Mary-Catherine Diebel and Deborah Hughes, musical equipment mogul Fred Crane and one man who responded to a compliment on his mustache by saying, "Thanks. It's a leftover from my Ramrod days."

There were craft cocktails by Silo Vodka, delicious little nibbles, a state-of-the-art listening station and a pair of $60,000 handmade wooden speakers from Switzerland that played a brief snippet of the group's most recent recording: Haydn's Lord Nelson Mass.

Needless to say, a cake was lit, "Happy Birthday" was sung and glasses were raised to toast 40 more years, which prompted one elderly guest to mutter, "40 years? I'll be lucky to make it to 2014." ◆

THERE BE DRAGONS

READING THE BOOKS OF YOUR childhood aloud to your kids, you sometimes stumble into prickly insights. Yes, the Babar series justifies colonialism, but it's also awful writing. Winnie-the-Pooh suffers from eating disorders. Mr. Toad is a textbook sociopath.

My daughter and I just finished reading The Hobbit, and I'd forgotten what a committed stand Tolkien takes on the topic of man-eating dragons. Dragons, of course, are symbolic of crass, material greed, like Kris Jenner with less surgery. Anyone who subscribes to their mindset meets a bad end, while Bilbo Baggins, the moral paragon of the story, volubly disdains money in favor of hearth, home comforts and hot breakfasts. Which got me wondering, how much would a multi-bedroom hobbit hole be worth today? Bilbo already owns prime real estate, closets full of expensive waistcoats and all the pipeweed he can smoke. Why would he care about boring dragon gold given his affluent, rent-free lifestyle? He's like a poster boy for a medieval Crate and Barrel catalog.

If historical materialism has taught us anything, it's that people—even Marxists—like to own stuff. But stuff evolves, and, nowadays, hobbity comfort is far more desirable than a pile of gold and emeralds. I, for one, would gladly face a swarm of goblins to win a quality living room set and a new HVAC system. In this holiday shopping issue, style editor Alix Childs shows us a whole slew of modern treasures to covet, while Lydia Santangelo unleashes the red-hot power of a festive wardrobe.

Jewelry artist Sophie Hughes' vintage hammers will never touch the head of a nail. That's because when this 27-year-old Maine native buys hammers, the texture of the steel, not the strength of the tool, is what she's really looking for. "I have one Ace Hardware hammer and that can hit nails, but it would never hit my silver," Hughes says.

Her designs of distressed silver and gold can be found at her new South End shop, Ore, which opened in November, stocking her full line as well as a selection of accessories from other local designers. Hughes' pieces are all created in her studio, located on the second floor of the shop. Torches, pliers, files and anvils surround her wooden workspace, but the hammers are the favorites.

She uses those hammers and her antique anvil to lend a rough texture to most of her bracelets, necklaces, earrings and rings, while the torches soften the metal when she's making more delicate chains. She also dunks silver in a patina dip, which speeds up the tarnishing, occasionally brushing away parts of the dip for an ombré effect. "The pieces themselves look kind of rugged and raw, and the smaller details balance it with a feminine aspect," Hughes says. After building her tool kit for nearly 13 years, she has a Vulcan level comfort working metal and flame—customers might even see her torching silver while chatting on the phone. Hannah Sheinberg

BRUCE BOOKS IT

A FIRST TOME FROM A TOP LOCAL TOQUE

BIG-NAME CHEFS OFTEN HAVE BIG egos to match—or sometimes exceed—their reputations. Not Daniel Bruce. The longtime executive chef of the Boston Harbor Hotel and founder of the Boston Wine Festival, Bruce has an endearing low-key persona. Maybe that's attributable to his upbringing in a series of rural New England settings. It certainly lends an appealing quality to his first cookbook, Simply New England. Its recipes are proudly regionally based, with entries like pumpkin Indian pudding and fiddlehead and green onion soup, and they often feature a family angle, from "Nana S.'s fall-off-the-bone crockpot chicken" to a meatless red flannel hash Bruce created for his vegetarian daughter.

Bruce includes marquee dishes such as grilled prime filet with horseradish sauce and red wine syrup—a signature at the hotel's Meritage restaurant for more than a decade—and 48-hour fennel-cured salmon. But the real attractions of the book, which was written with former Boston Herald food critic Mat Schaffer, are, as the title suggests, simple preparations: molasses barbecued chicken, easy Maine potato and chive cakes, even recipes for meatloaf, tapioca pudding and perfectly fluffy pancakes. (Bruce is no food snob: His "favorite" chicken recipe is enhanced with onion soup mix by his nana, although he refrains from using that ingredient in the entry.) And there are tips, stories and a selection of soups to keep you happily busy in the kitchen all winter. In short, this one's a keeper.

AN OPEN BOOK: Chef Daniel Bruce

SPITTING IMAGE

The forthcoming Seaport restaurant expected to be known as M.C. Medici will henceforth be called M.C. Spiedo. That's the word from a rep for Mark Gaier and Clark Frasier, the James Beard Award-winning chefs famous for Arrows Restaurant in Maine. Spiedo means "spit" or "skewer" in Italian, and a 40-inch steel spit will be used to roast locally sourced meats and poultry at the Italian-themed restaurant, slated to open in February at the Renaissance Boston Waterfront Hotel.

WARD TIMES

A NEW SPOT AIMS TO DRAW NORTH AND WEST END CROWDS.

Ward 8
90 N. Washington St., Boston
(617-823-8544) ward8.com

RESTAURANTS, EVEN MORE THAN CONDO conversions, are slaves to location. But what if one isn't planted squarely in a defined neighborhood? What if it straddles two identities? Nicholas Frattaroli is betting that'll mean twice the customer base for his new spot, Ward 8, which will open in the space formerly occupied by Nebo on North Washington Street.

Separated by a stream of traffic from the heavily touristed lanes of the North End, Ward 8 is also detached—by virtue of open ground left by the Big Dig—from the hustle of North Station and the TD Garden in the West End. Nebo found success here by luring a pre-event crowd yearning for more cultivated fare than that found in sports bars. Frattaroli, 28, has similar high hopes.

"Not to say anything bad about the sports bars, or the North End, but there's nothing like this," Frattaroli says. "It's a great spot in the city, near the North End, Charlestown, West End."

The open layout now has an enormous bar, which can accommodate 30 people, in the center of the space, as well as room for 70 at the reclaimed wood tables in the dining areas—and he promises to take reservations, even on game nights. The large brick wall in the space is adorned with an oversized Ward 8 logo, and diners can still grab a premium people-watching seat by the windows.

Frattaroli brought in Ken Schweizer (Bristol Lounge) to lead the kitchen. Schweizer points to the maple-chili duck wings, the olive-oil-poached tuna melt and the clay-pot-steamed fish as highlights from a menu he hopes will stand out from Causeway Street's pizza and chicken wings. Frattaroli gave the cocktail reins to Mike Wyatt (Eastern Standard), whose Bitters with Pleasure was a recent finalist in a national Angostura cocktail contest. And of course, there's the restaurant's eponymous Ward 8.

Frattaroli is a first-time owner, but he's hardly inexperienced. He made his bones working for his aunt and uncle at their North End restaurants (Lucia, Ducali, Artu and more).

"My uncle and aunt have taught me a lot. I think that's where I get a love for the industry," Frattaroli says. "You gotta really love it. He showed me you gotta be there every day, all day, all night. He made me love it, and I want to be the same way."

BAND OF BROTHERS

Filmmaker Tom Berninger joined his older brother's band, the National, on tour and ended up with 200 hours of footage. Self-mockumentary Mistaken for Strangers screens on Dec. 5 at the UMass Boston Film Series.

WHAT'S IT LIKE BEING ON THE ROAD WITH A ROCK BAND? [illegible] might have been a lot different in the '70s. It would've been a lot of fun. I got to see Europe. But for the most part, at least this rock band, they're pretty organized, they're pretty put together and they're a lot of nice guys. There's a lot of being on your computer and sleeping.

DID YOU EVER THINK THAT THIS FILM WOULD OPEN THE TRIBECA FILM FESTIVAL? No. Nope. No way. When I was [illegible] opening, I was in the executive producer Marshall Lurie's office. One of his assistants said, "Your movie's opening the festival." And I thought that it was one of Marshall's movies...and I'm like, "Oh, congratulations, Marshall." And I think he's kind of like, "No, I think congratulations to you. It's your movie."

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE MUSIC DOCUMENTARY? Heavy Metal Parking Lot. It's a film made in 1986 in the parking lot of a Judas Priest concert...It's only 20 minutes long, but it's a real slice of life of 1980s heavy-metal fans. It's more or less to do with the culture than the music.

HAS YOUR RELATIONSHIP WITH YOUR BROTHER CHANGED AT ALL BECAUSE OF THIS EXPERIENCE? We've definitely gotten a lot closer. He saw me as an adult and as a person with ideas and opinions that now he had to take somewhat seriously. I'm not a little kid anymore. I'm a man. He [is] nine years older than me, almost 10. And I think all my life I thought he was a larger-than-life figure in my eyes. And I always had to live up to him, not only because he's my older brother, but he was kind of another adult figure in my life and a very successful one. When I finally got to be around him so much on tour, I saw that he made mistakes. He made decisions that proved wrong. I saw that what he did was very risky, and it took a lot of guts and he fell on his face many, many times. I saw that he was human. / Sarah Hagman

Good Eats: Wild Oats

$7.50 at Rifrullo Cafe, 147 Cypress St., Brookline (617-505-6727) rifrullocafe.com

Brookline recently traded one homey eatery for another, when the old Sealey's Lunch joint gave way to Colleen Marnell-Suhanosky's new Rifrullo Cafe. The Cypress Street space offers plenty of sunshine (big windows and comfy seats are part of the charm), not to mention a particularly good bowl of porridge. There are rolled oats but also nuttier-tasting buckwheat, tender-yet-firm pieces of roasted apple, currants, maple, cinnamon and, most notably, a good measure of salt that helps make breakfast just right. / Elizabeth Bomze

SWEET SPOT: EH offers sipping chocolate as well as bars, barks and bonbons.

Le Chocolat Chaud,

Purveyors: Cocoa Loco

You know you've found an extraordinary hot chocolate when the cocoa mix tastes good straight out of the tin. Le Chocolate Chaud, mixed by Elaine Hsieh and Catharine Sweeney at their Somerville-based business EHChocolatier, starts with a combo of dark chocolate from next-door neighbor Taza and E. Guittard Kokoleka milk chocolate; coarse, irregular bits are scattered throughout the finer powder and melt beautifully in hot milk. The rest of the ingredient list is short and not too sweet—cocoa powder, a moderate amount of sugar and espresso, which makes this sophisticate's sipping chocolate extra-dark and a bit smoky. / Elizabeth Bomze

Drink of the Moment
APPLE IN "QUERRY"

PRICE: $13

INVENTOR: 51 Lincoln bartender Ginny Edwards

INGREDIENTS: Laird's Apple Brandy, Bonny Doon Querry Soarkling Cider from Belmont, apple cider and cinnamon simple syrup. Garnished with a dehydrated apple chip dredged in cinnamon, sugar and cayenne.

SO IT'S A CIDER DRINK: Yes. Bonny Doon Vineyard is a Californian winery that branched out with a cider blended from pear, apple and quince. "It's very dry," comments Edwards. "I love cider in all forms, but I'm a dry-oriented consumer."

CONCEIT: "It's a variation of a cocktail I conceptualized years ago," Edwards says. The original version used vodka instead of apple brandy. "It's approachable to all women and is served in a highball glass, so men are comfortable getting in on the action."

TASTE: A light, almost summery refreshment in autumn flavors. The cinnamon and spice on the nose slides into the crisp fruit of the cider float, then into the rounder warmth of the brandy. The lemon adds a splash of brightness.

PAIR IT WITH: One of the menu's artisanal cheeses from Wasik's, or the apple fritters with mascarpone on the dessert list. "It's meant to be drunk before dinner, or during, or after," laughs Edwards. "You can keep having it."

CONTEXT: Edwards is a member of the kitchen/bar interdisciplinary school. "The interplay is continuous," she says. "I'm back with those guys, cooking every day." She'll appropriate the liquid from the poached pears, or help whip up a meringue and use it for a cocktail. "There's no front of the house or back of the house."

NEXT PROJECTS: The kitchen recently bought a 250-pound pig, so Edwards conceived a winter warmer cocktail with butternut squash and pork. "My pork-fat-washed bourbon is resting in the window right now." / Andrew Rimas

Table the Matter

With contours merciful on those of us who lack a knack for gift-wrapping, coffee-table books are go-tos for holiday giving. Here are a few new releases from local talents. / Jacqueline Houton

Photographers Joseph Votano and Karen Hosking have taken the pulse of the city by assessing its arteries—namely the four T lines that 720,000 of us cram onto daily. Featuring nearly 150 photographs, Boston Below captures the expressions of rush-hour strap-hangers, the grease and grit of behind-the-scenes maintenance work, and station art and architecture you may have missed while staring at your Catch the T app.

Malden's Get on Down made its name with deluxe music reissues for hard-core fans—say, a box set of GZA's Liquid Swords that complements the album art with a mini chess set. Now the company's first foray into book publishing showcases 75 drum machines from co-founder Joe Mansfield's collection. Beat Box: A Drum Machine Obsession packs plenty of images, music history and interviews, plus a download code so you can hear the machines in action.

Boston literary publicist Sandra Goroff has long worked with the likes of Maurice Sendak and Thomas H. Cook, but now she's got a book of her very own: Solitary Soul, a slim but evocative collection of photography. Capturing quiet moments and overlooked corners—a New Bedford chapel's sunlit back steps, a dapper elderly gent in full suit and tie at Nantasket Beach—it's eye candy for your favorite introvert.

HAIR-RAISING Simply Great Beard Oil offers formulas in a variety of scents.

GRIZZLY BEARDS

Red Sox beards have come and mostly gone, and Movember has reached its end, but facial hair is here to stay. Karen Belair, master barber at Barbershop Lounge, walks us through some of the growing pains. / Hannah Brown

Equal Treatments

Facial hair isn't much different from the hair growing on top of your head. According to Belair, "Both need care and grooming with regular cutting, styling and professional products to be clean, healthy and stylish." She suggests daily use of both shampoo and conditioner for the best results.

Mint Condition

While daily maintenance is essential, constant use of soaps may leave you with flaking skin and a frizzy beard. Belair recommends using conditioner on whiskers and moisturizer for the skin. For a one-stop solution, try out a beard oil like one of the 29 made by Simply Great Beard Oil. Choose from scents like leather, bacon and wasabi that are made in East Hampstead, N.H.

Cutting Edge

Attention and dedication to trimming will make or break your beard experience. "It's always easier when done regularly, even daily," Belair says. Short and medium-length beards require more attention to maintain shape and style. "Invest in a quality two-way trimmer: one to edge and manage length, the other to keep the outline," Belair advises. All you need to get it right is a little commitment and the proper equipment.

BIG WOMEN

THE LIVES OF A MOTHER AND HER FAMOUS LITERARY DAUGHTER

Marmee & Louisa: The Untold Story of Louisa May Alcott and Her Mother* by Eve LaPlante
Published by Simon & Schuster, 386 pages, $16 paperback
This book is about the Alcott family.

LOUISA MAY ALCOTT ONCE SAID THAT A philosopher is "a man up in a balloon, with his family and friends holding the ropes, trying to haul him down." The feckless idealism of her philosopher dad, Bronson, brought Louisa and mother Marmee close, close together. The family moved 30 times in 30 years, sewing, cleaning, teaching, taking in boarders to pay the rent, enduring family deaths and almost never imagining that Louisa would eventually become America's best-selling female writer.

The language in their letters and diaries soars with the literary energy of Herman Melville, almost biblically at times, in expressions of their mutual love. They make graceful sense of their torments and longings, including the problem of Bronson's cloudy, months-long absences.

Mother and daughter were the true couple. Marmee wrote, "Oh! may this pen your muse inspire, when wrapd in pure poetic fire." Meanwhile, Louisa wrote pot-boilers, even bodice-rippers, before coming to Little Women, which cozily compressed her own family's affections and struggles. From their tightly knit domesticity, these two women raised ideological fists. LaPlante—an Alcott relative—focuses on their surprisingly modern feminist spirit and the language they used to speak for abolition and women's equality.

FROM PAGE 138: "Strengthen your mind by reflection, till your head becomes a balance for your heart.... your actions would be more perpendicular, [your] whole life more direct and true." ◆

The Escape Artist / Sarah Hagman

FINE-TUNED

NASHVILLE MAY BE KNOWN FOR ITS MUSIC, BUT IT'S NO ONE-TRICK PONY.

TO SAY THAT TENNESSEE HAS GOOD MUSIC is to declare the obvious. Nashville is home to more than 130 live music venues. But the cradle of country is also home to oft-overlooked attractions in art, food and history. It's the sort of place where, to celebrate the city's reputation as the Athens of the South, they built a replica of the Parthenon, and each of the state's 95 counties saw a battle in the Civil War. It's the sort of place where people enjoy life enough to eat dessert at lunch.

That doesn't mean you should skip the music. Famed haunts like Honky Tonk or the Bluebird have live shows almost every night of the week, but for a place with a storied past, head to the Ryman Auditorium. Built in 1891, this former church has played host to some of the greats. Legends like Hank Williams have graced the stage, and audiences have seen Harry Houdini escape from water and Anna Pavlova pirouette. For three decades it was also home to the Grand Ole Opry, the country's longest-running live-audience radio show. And although there might not have been dressing rooms or air conditioning until 1994, the building boasts acoustics superior to Carnegie Hall. Its semicircle of pews sits just as it was more than a century ago, sans the 60 pounds of gum that was removed a few years back. On the way out, check out the storied back alley, where the Everly Brothers were first discovered while performing on the street. Then take 17 steps to Tootsie's for a nightcap and possible encore performance, but be prepared to take 34 steps back by Willie Nelson's count.

A few more steps past that and you'll make it to Hatch Show Print, the poster child of old letterpress print shops. Housed in the same building as the Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum, the company started off printing advertisements for visiting circuses, operas and sporting events. It's since been part of Nike and Jack Daniel's campaigns, and in addition to making limited-edition prints for all of the Ryman's 250 events a year, the workers exclusively design and hand-set all of B.B. King and Willie Nelson's posters.

Twenty miles south of Nashville, where both the Southern accents and herds of cows are more prominent, is Franklin. Boutiques line Main Street, the quaint downtown has restaurants, and at the center, you'll come across the Franklin Theatre. The venue has been screening movies since 1937, having even rolled out the red carpet for premieres of Friday Night Lights and Elizabethtown, and it now showcases plays and—you guessed it—live music.

Around the corner, you'll find Puckett's Grocery & Restaurant. The eatery's tables and chairs are charmingly mismatched, and you can purchase six-packs and barbecue sauce off the shelves, but they've upgraded from plastic foam plates and red plastic cups. Nashville songwriters perform at all three of their area locations—you might hear them talk about how they wrote hits that bought them flat-screen televisions and circle driveways.

Some of the stars who've made those songwriters' lyrics famous live in the sprawling acres of a historic district tucked away in Franklin. Leiper's Fork may have less than 500 residents, but don't cross it off the map. What the village lacks in the census count it makes up for in community and hospitality.

Yeoman's in the Fork, a rare book and document gallery, stores treasures like a signed first edition of Gone With the Wind in its original dust jacket. There's a handful of galleries, one a restored barn and another an old gas station, that display items like copper utensils with antler handles and local and internationally known artists' work. Pick up leather goods at West & Company or linens and home decor at Serenite Maison, where guitars hang on walls for visitors to play and the local kids' heights are charted on the front door.

Those looking for an organic meal can take a seat at Joe Natural's, but you can also turn to the original Puckett's location. Its open-mic Thursday nights guarantee good music. Wynonna Judd may be practicing her new sets, or a local teenager might share the stage with a saxophonist who's played with the Temptations or a guitarist who worked with Elvis. End the night in one of the rocking chairs by a fire pit outside, and you'll consider leaving behind an urban lifestyle for Middle Tennessee's Southern comforts. ◆

SHANGHAI SOCIAL CLUB SEEKS A MIDDLE PATH BETWEEN TRADITIONAL AND AMERICANIZED CHINESE.

1277 Comm. Ave., Allston

IF THERE'S A GULF THAT SEPARATES FOOD GEEKS from the rest of the world, it might be the ocean between traditional and Americanized Chinese food. We don't mock Kowloon and P.F. Chang's because the Andelman brothers love them (though that hardly helps), but for the cartoonish parody of "real" Chinese cuisines they serve. There's too much deep-frying, too many candy-sweet flavors, that magenta stuff on the spare ribs we know doesn't exist in nature. With such fancy dining rooms, they must be compensating for lousy chefs, right? American-Chinese is for old folks, for philistines, for flyover country. Food geeks in big American cities have access to the real deal, and that's what we want.

And yet there are times when American-Chinese is what's needed. Grandma won't be happy if she can't get beef and broccoli. Some of your less enlightened friends are wary of Chinatown. Maybe the occasion calls for something dressier. What if somebody prepared fusty American-Chinese cuisine with a little more care, added a few modern dishes for the Momofuku fetishists, maybe poured some serious cocktails? This appears to be the aim of Shanghai Social Club, and it's a pretty bold bet in an Allston neighborhood that boasts some of the city's best traditional Chinese joints (like Shanghai Gate and JoJo Taipei) and a lot of frugal undergraduates. Taking a page from nightclubby spots like Back Bay's Red Lantern and its ginormous Seaport sibling, Empire, Shanghai Social Club has spent large on decor (including its own giant golden Buddha), creating a lovely red-lit room with a comfortable bar, plenty of big booths and many intimate corners for date nights, with prices more reminiscent of downtown than the 88 Connection food court. Will it fly?

Imbibers tired of Allston's pitifully scant options for serious cocktails will certainly welcome the high-quality Tiki drinks, several steps above college-bar scorpion bowls. The prettily presented Mai Tai ($10) balances rich aged rums and sweetly nutty orgeat syrup with bracing fresh lime, and the Zombie ($11) reflects the spice syrups and exotic spirits that separate real Tiki cocktails from fakers. The list features another eight originals in the 1930s Tiki style of Donn Beach. Two dozen beers (drafts $4.25-$5.75, bottles $3.75-$11) run the gamut from featherweight American-style macro adjunct lagers like China's Yanjing ($4.75/bottle) to feistier craft brews like California's hazy Belgian-style Lost Abbey Devotion Ale ($5.75 on tap). For wine, eight whites, one rosé and eight reds run simple and affordable (glasses $7-$13, bottles $27-$48), with plenty of the German-style whites that are particularly friendly to Asian food.

Plates of steamed buns ($8-$10), popularized in the U.S. by celeb chefs like David Chang and Eddie Huang but long known to fans of Taiwanese cuisine as gua bao, are fluffy rounds of steamed bread, like puffed-up flour tortillas, folded around fiercely flavored fillings of meat or seafood. Ginger-braised pork belly and the nearly-as-porky lion's head meatball versions stand out; only crispy chicken skin falters, with a stale flavor that suggests it was fried earlier in the day and reheated. Steaming noodle bowls ($10-$11) are generous and feature good al dente noodles and a raw egg that doesn't quite cook in the broth. A version with red roast pork ($10) mercifully lands closer to traditional sweet Shanghainese "red cooking" than the expected gloppy American-Chinese brown sauce.

Strong versions of classic appetizers include excellent pan-fried shrimp dumplings ($9) and very good pork dumplings ($7), what Joyce Chen would have called Peking ravioli and found pleasing. Ample-sized specialties ($11-$16) likewise do a better job recalling the homeland roots of American-Chinese classics than your average Golden Temple. Shanghai spicy chicken ($13) offers a boatload of garlic and a fair whack of chili heat. Empress shrimp ($15) is subtle, light and generously laden with fat prawns. XO scallops ($16) evoke a fragrant whiff of Hong Kong, adding the distinctive, insistent dried-seafood and salty/smoky ham flavors of XO sauce to a string of plump, nicely browned sea scallops.

Service is more of a mixed bag. On busier weekend nights, staffers are smoothly ingratiating, attentive and on-point, but slower weeknights are paradoxically rougher, with service more scattered and mistake-prone. Regardless, the overall experience represents an intriguing step forward for Allston, walking the line between kitsch and craft, between ironic winking at America's middlebrow expropriation of Chinese cuisine and a more serious appreciation of it. At its best, Shanghai Social Club presents a novel combination: a posh, swinging nightspot on weekends, a quieter place for grownups on weeknights, with a something-for-everyone menu and proper drinks for both audiences. In an Allston that perpetually stumbles between worthy but humble outposts of traditional world cuisines and execrable beer-soaked dives for bro-dudes, that's a welcome new development. ◆

Q: THE SKIN UNDER MY EYES IS STARTING TO SAG AND DEVELOP LINES. IS THERE A NON-SURGICAL WAY TO IMPROVE THAT AREA?

A: Yes. Lower eyelid surgery is the procedure of choice if there is a significant amount of loose skin or large bags under the eyes. If your sagging skin and lines under the eyes are more moderate, that can usually be successfully treated with non-invasive skin tightening.

This safe procedure involves using radio frequency to tighten up skin by heating up the collagen, causing it to contract. The results are noticeable, usually at least a 25%-50% improvement in the appearance and laxity of the skin after a few treatments. There is no downtime and you can return to work or normal activities immediately following the 30 minute session. You will look younger and refreshed.

Our RF procedure can also be used to tighten up skin elsewhere on the face and body such as the jowls, neck, and stomach. Call us today for a free consultation!

FRANCO'S FOLLIES

JAMES FRANCO ISN'T A WELCOME FACE IN SYLVESTER STALLONE'S HOMEFRONT.

DOES JAMES FRANCO HAVE THE MOST punchable face in movies right now? The eccentric professional dilettante has certainly been busy lately, taking a break from his rigorous schedule of getting multiple graduate degrees in various states to direct a Faulkner adaptation, a Sal Mineo biopic and some weird gay porn exposé that all mysteriously (and presumably mercifully) bypassed area theaters. Every career choice feels like a performance art stunt for the most zonked Oscar host in history, and one can assume that he signed on to play the baddie in this generic Jason Statham programmer for the same reason he showed up on General Hospital: because it was there. Franco seems to have a pretty decent handle on how insufferable his public persona is, sending himself up to sly comic effect this past summer in This Is the End. You can think James Franco's turn in Spring Breakers was the defining supporting performance of this year and still want to watch him get his block knocked off by Statham. At least I do.

Adapted by Academy Award–nominated screenwriter Sylvester Stallone (I love typing that) from an airport novel by Chuck Logan, Homefront is a no-frills meat-and-potatoes thriller that could just as easily have been from 1988. Like most Statham vehicles, it's the kind of comfortably predictable time-killer that would feel more at home on cable some Sunday afternoon when football season is over. (The holiday theatrical release was a canny counter-programming move to give husbands something to see at the mall while their wives are shopping.) Homefront isn't bad, for what it is.

Homefront has been scripted with Stallone's usual brisk efficiency and rigid adherence to cliche.

Statham stars as Phil Broker, a DEA agent who tries to hang up his badge after a biker gang bust goes bloody and bad (the undercover operation features the delightful sight of cue ball Statham rocking a mullet). Settling into a sleepy town outside of Shreveport, La., with his cute-as-a-button daughter (Izabela Vidovic), Broker wants nothing more than to be left alone. You know how that always goes in movies like this.

There's a schoolyard scuffle with a class bully who learns the hard way not to pick on Broker's little girl. She flattens the kid, much to the alarm and embarrassment of his cranked-out white-trash folks (Kate Bosworth and Frank Grillo). In an amusingly Stallone-d riff on the Yasmina Reza play God of Carnage, it's the parents who belong in the playground, escalating the conflict as Statham models a variety of mesh trucker hats and Canadian tuxedos, insisting that he doesn't want any trouble.

As it turns out, Bosworth's brother is a low-rent drug kingpin named Gator. Played by Franco in such an advanced state of ironic detachment that he might as well be sitting alongside you in the theater munching popcorn, Gator hardly cuts an imposing figure. But as rotten luck or screenwriting contrivance would have it, Gator's got business connections with that biker gang Broker burned in the prologue, and his skanked-out Lady Mac-meth gal pal wants to bargain for bigger and better distribution deals in exchange for the former agent's head. She's played by Winona Ryder—where do the years go?

Homefront has been scripted with Stallone's usual brisk efficiency and rigid adherence to cliche. There's a fetching school teacher in low-cut blouses for Statham to flirt with chastely, as Sly's characters are always too forthright and noble to ever consider having sex. Clancy Brown has a bit of fun as a local sheriff who may not be as useless as he seems, and there's even the obligatory doomed black-guy comic-relief sidekick (Omar Benson Miller).

Of course, not much feels at stake here because nobody in the movie is able to pose much of a threat to Statham. These drooling rednecks try to take him on two or three at a time, but before long Broker is beating an entire gang with two hands literally tied behind his back. Director Gary Fleder shoots the fights too close and cuts them too quickly, as is the sad standard for action these days. When Statham finally squares off against Franco, it's not like there's any suspense on how that one's going to turn out.

Still, Homefront pushes all the expected buttons and gets the job done without much fuss. It isn't bad, for what it is. ◆

LIGHTNING BUGG

BEYOND-HIS-YEARS BRITISH TEENAGER CATCHES CLASSIC ROCK 'N' ROLL SPARK.

LIFE'S A WHIRLWIND FOR JAKE BUGG AT AGE 19, even if he sounds pretty calm and detached from it all. During the past year, the singer/guitarist from a sprawling housing project in the English Midlands city of Nottingham has seen his eponymous debut rocket him to the top of the U.K. charts. And as if it wasn't enough to tour sold-out clubs in the U.S., he stopped in California to make his second album with über-producer Rick Rubin.

"It's all I ever wanted to do," Bugg says of his thriving music career. "Strangely, it became a reality. I never thought it would become a reality. Before the first record, I'd never been out of England."

On the phone from Texas before a recent tour break, Bugg sounds like a typical teenager. He's blunt, casual and relatively taciturn, with a thick accent to match. His music speaks for itself though, echoing early Bob Dylan as well as '90s Britpop—and fueled by Bugg's uncannily melodic phrasing. His assured debut ranges from the opening jolt of "Lightning Bolt," which introduces his affinity for shuffle beats, to tender acoustic ballads that remind one of how Bugg gravitated to music at age [illegible] after hearing Don McLean's "Vincent" on an episode of The Simpsons.

While he downplays the Dylan influence, Bugg favors early rock 'n' roll inspirations. They include not only '60s figureheads like Jimi Hendrix (Bugg rips on lead guitar when he switches from acoustic to electric) and the Beatles but also predecessors like bluesman Robert Johnson, fingerpicker John Martyn and the Quarrymen, the John Lennon-led combo that played the mixture of folk, blues and jazz called skiffle.

"Hendrix, the Beatles, Neil Young, Johnny Cash—those were the guys I was influenced by, and I was interested in seeing who influenced them," Bugg says. "So I went back and checked out some history, and for some reason, it sounded good to my ears."

He can't say the same for today's music. Bugg has even rankled some by dissing contemporaries from One Direction to Mumford & Sons, who he was quoted as calling "posh farmers with banjos."

"Hendrix, the Beatles, Neil Young, Johnny Cash—those were the guys I was influenced by."

"That's just not for me, and it's not what I do," he says more tactfully. "I'd love to find something that I enjoy listening to. I really would. But my ears don't let me, even when it's stuff that's amazingly popular."

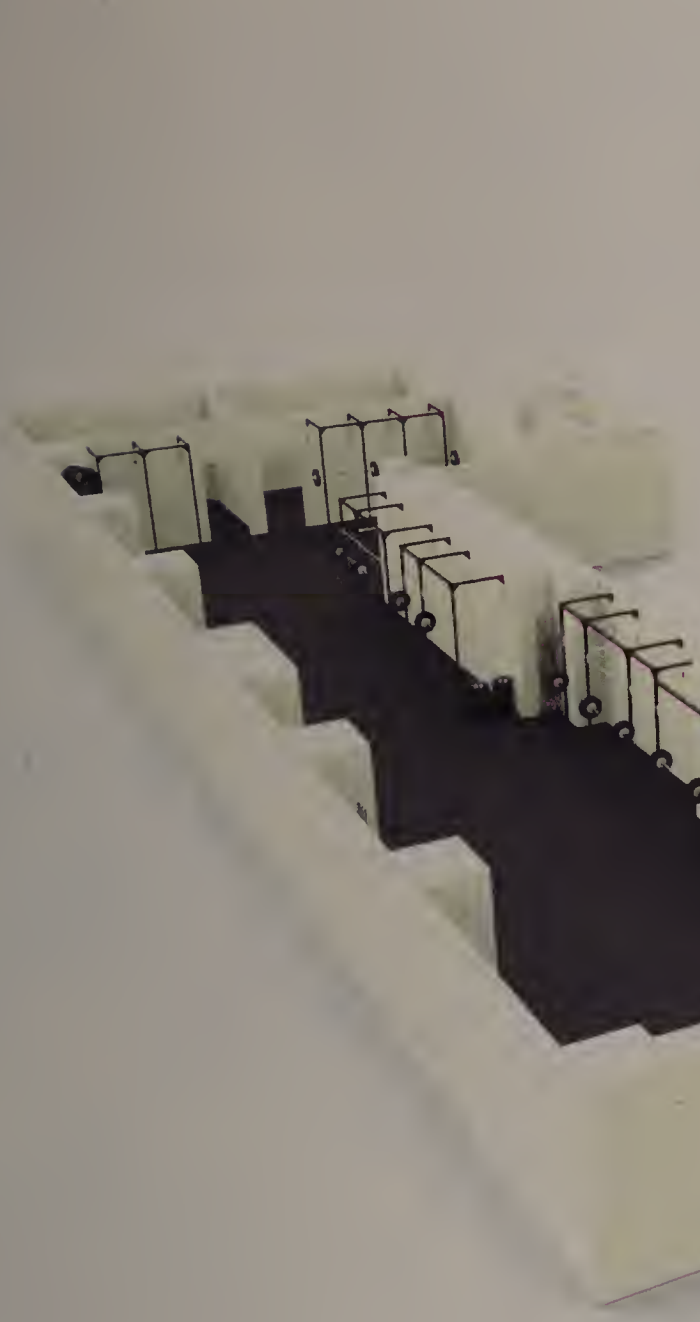
Bugg enjoys a slightly more souped-up sound on the just-released Shangri La, named after the Malibu hideaway of Rubin, known for his work with Johnny Cash, the Beastie Boys, Slayer and the Avett Brothers. Initially drafted to remix Bugg's ballad-hymn "Broken," the producer kept tape rolling through a dozen of the British teenager's new tunes, with help from studio musicians that included the Red Hot Chili Peppers' Chad Smith and Elvis Costello sideman Pete Thomas on drums.

"He gave me ideas, and he was really a chilled out guy," Bugg says of Rubin. "I wasn't trying to attach a big name to an album. We just worked well together."

The first single, "What Doesn't Kill You," sports a lyrical snarl and rat-ta-tat chords that evoke the Arctic Monkeys, the only post-Oasis band that cracks Bugg's personal pantheon. He wrote the song after a friend was robbed on the street in Germany, though the singer offers, "Wherever you are in the world, that kind of thing goes on."

Take Clifton estate, the housing complex where he grew up. Bugg spins narrative details from its rough underbelly in songs like the older "Seen It All," though he spent much of his spare time writing in his bedroom.

"I couldn't afford to go out and socialize," he says. "Whenever I could, of course I would, because that's what you do. That's where a lot of the song subjects came from, from observation of life around the 'burbs."



If it weren't for music, Bugg says, "I'd probably be packing up at a factory somewhere." Now he has other business. "I get to live my dreams, to go on the road and make records," says the singer, who plays House of Blues on Jan. 11. "I just want to play my songs." ◆

MY LITTLE LIST

AN ANNUAL ROUNDUP OF FAVORITE PEOPLE AND THINGS

IT'S ALWAYS A TREAT TO DISCOVER UNUSUAL people doing unique things in Boston. Jim Devaney is a great character I met at the bar of one of my favorite restaurants. He's a rare breed these days, a manufacturer in an era in which so much has moved overseas. With his labels Abas Accessories and Insignia Athletics, Jim makes extraordinary leather products. Several years ago he told me he was producing custom baseball gloves, so I ordered a glove for me and ones for all the boys in my family. These are works of art, pieces of leather sculpture, with the boys' first names woven into the leather strap. I'll play catch for the next 30 years knowing that, with my glove, I can be Willie Mays, making an over-the-shoulder catch on anything hit to center. And I just had him use high-end red leather to make the best wallet I've ever owned. Jim describes his business as an "American Hermès," and I agree.

In this holiday gift mode, here are a few ideas. When I need special presents for special friends, I have journals made for them. Not ordinary journals, but ones of fine paper, bound in colored leather, with titles—for instance, Juliet's Magical Mystery Journal—stamped in gold. Harcourt Bindery in Charlestown does this beautiful work. Years ago, my publisher used to present authors with leather-bound copies of their books as a Christmas present, a work of art. Those days of quality and attention to detail are long gone, but Harcourt Bindery lives on, and people love receiving these small jewels.

As you wander Boston, a city of book readers with almost no bookstores these days, pop into Blackstone's on Charles Street. The store is a potpourri of little wonders, from toys to magic boxer shorts and gifts of all kinds. And books. The books are eclectic, but include special books by special locals, from Nathaniel Philbrick to Shelly Dickson Carr to William Martin. Make sure to say hello to the owners, the very chic Jennifer Hill and creative gem Mark Duffield. They'll tell you stories of wondrous times past and make you happy that you stopped in.

In the book department over the past year, two mystery authors stand out. James Lee Burke is the lushest novelist in America, and one of our best. If you have a brain and a romantic heart, you'll be hooked. John Lawton is British and the author of the brilliant "Inspector Troy" series, mostly set in London during the Blitz. Troy is a musician from a wealthy family whose father is a media czar like Rupert Murdoch, but who chose Scotland Yard as his career. If you love Downton Abbey, with all of its upstairs-downstairs adventures, you'll really enjoy Lawton's lords, criminals and spies.

The same is true for British novelist Jane Gardam, whose books describe the World War II generation in the Far East and England. Start with the odd-titled Old Filth. It stands for "Failed In London, Try Hong Kong," and it's a gem, full of great characters and plot. But for really dark noir, I suggest Headstone by Ken Bruen. He writes chillingly of the underside of crime and criminals in Ireland, noting that the fight for the light is mostly a losing battle.

If you need uplifting, read the best guidebook to Rome I've ever seen, the late great G.Franco

Those days of quality and attention to detail are long gone, but Harcourt Bindery lives on, and people love receiving these small jewels.

Romagnoli's A Thousand Bells at Noon. It's a delight, written with joy by a Roman who loved the city's history. And you could couple this with Italian cookbooks by Judith Barrett, who creates unusual dishes in Cambridge. I especially love Risotto and Saved by Soup. What a title.

Memorable restaurant bites I can mention this year include the dishes at Erbaluce, crunchy eggplant at Via Matta, the veal chop at Sorellina and buccatelli amatriciana rihanna at Bin 26 Enoteca. Most romantic: people watching in the bar/lounge at Mistral. I always love the duck at Rialto, the comfort food at Davio's, brunch at the Beacon Hill Bistro and the imagination of Ken Oringer's creations. My restaurant of the year is Toscano on Brattle Street in Harvard Square. In the summertime, sit by the open windows, ask for a taste of their imaginative Florentine menu and eavesdrop on the highest level of gossip, from who's doing what to whom in the Obama White House to who hates whom around Harvard.

Happy holidays! ◆

A WEEKEND OF SOLO PARENTING

THE WEEKEND IN MID-NOVEMBER LOOMED large on my calendar for months in advance. That's when Heather had scheduled a trip to New York to see her college friends, leaving me alone with the kids. This prospect made me nervous, because weekend solo parenting is like borrowing a friend's car—you're praying that you make it through the trip without a fender-bender or a blown gasket, because it's on you if anything goes wrong. Kids are going to occasionally wipe out and hurt themselves, but I just want them to avoid any trips to the ER until there's somebody else to blame.

The first night is easy. They're both in bed by 8 pm, and then I'm free to engage in manly dude activities, by which I mean taking a bath while drinking wine and reading a 20,000-word Vanity Fair story about rich people who are mad at one another. I don't normally take many baths because Heather will walk in and say mean things like "Calgon, take me away!" She also makes fun of my moisturizer, even though Oil of Olay is clearly unisex.

The next morning I'm quickly reminded that having a 3-year-old is like living with a roommate who's always on mushrooms. You just take it for granted that at any time a member of your household might walk up, peer into your ear and ask, "Bob, are you in there?" Meanwhile, the younger one interrupts our morning cartoons by ripping an impressive fart and then laughing about it, revealing Kix stuck in his teeth that make him look like a tiny toothless farting hillbilly. Before long, I'm talking to myself and perambulating about the house by doing the grapevine, because I've already lost my frame of reference for normal human behavior. It's not yet 8 am.

Saturday is a bit of a cheat, though, because I actually have to go do a story, so Grandma arrives and takes over for the afternoon and early evening. Said story involves driving an SUV in the mud. This, it turns out, will figure heavily in my next day's schedule.

My plan for Sunday is to kill time until the magical hour of 1 pm, when I can put the kids down for naps and then spend an hour or two watching football. But before I can do that, there are about six hours to fill. What to do? Hey, how about washing the muddy truck? That might get us to 10 am.

I'm on my way to the car wash, kids in back, when it occurs to me that this thing has so much mud underneath it that a trip through the wash might only chisel off the top layer. That's when it dawns on me: the lake. There's a lake about 20 minutes away, and if I drive down the boat ramp, I can get the bottom of the car wet so that the mud falls right off in the car wash. It's a really smart plan.

I arrive at the lake and back down the boat ramp until the rear bumper touches the water, then power out in a hurry. I turn around to begin the same process with the front, and within 30 seconds a white pickup pulls into the parking lot. The driver looks quite agitated, so I back up the ramp and drive over to talk to him.

"Everything OK?" he asks. "I saw you going into the lake and thought maybe you lost your brakes or something, so I was going to pull you out." I'm glad for his concern, but I belatedly realize that he probably thought my undercarriage-soaking gambit was something decidedly more disturbing. Your day is probably not a total parenting triumph if you get mistaken for a murderer. I think it's time to head to the car wash.

Your day is probably not a total parenting triumph if you get mistaken for a murderer.

The rest of the day passes uneventfully. I expect Heather home around 5 pm, so at about 4:52 I pry the boys off the couch and hustle them outside to act as if we've spent the day vigorously enjoying the fresh air rather than napping, watching TV, eating Kix and driving into lakes. The ploy works, as when she rounds the corner they're running around on the lawn, frolicking amongst the leaves and generally playing the role of rosy-cheeked cherubs who might burst into song at any moment.

When she asks how it went, though, I roll my eyes and say something like, "Well, they're a handful." They weren't, really, but I can't say that. I might want to take a weekend trip with my buddies at some point, and I need money in the bank. So, it was a nightmare! They cried and threw up and one of them bit me at the supermarket when I wouldn't buy him beer. They're animals, I tell you. Animals. If you need me, I'll be in the tub. ◆

PITCHING QUESTIONS

THE NESN BASEBALL REPORTER TALKS PLAYER ACCESS, WORLD SERIES RINGS AND BIG PAPI.

NESN RED SOX REPORTER JENNY DELL, 27, IS A NATIVE OF Southbury, Conn., and started out studying hospitality at UMass Amherst with plans for a career as a chef. Instead, she decided to pursue her love of sports at ESPN, where she worked both behind and in front of the camera covering MLB, NFL, NBA and NASCAR. She began at NESN in 2012, joining Don Orsillo and Jerry Remy in delivering Red Sox news and updates, reporting from the field, conducting interviews and contributing to pre- and postgame shows. She also serves as a reporter for NESN Sports Today and hosts The Ultimate Red Sox Show and Red Sox Report. She lives in Boston.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Have you always been a Red Sox fan?
JENNY DELL: No. But I've always been a baseball fan. I used to watch with my father, and I've always been really into the game. But a lot of my college friends were from Boston, and they brought me to Fenway, and it was love at first sight.

Did you have less access to the players during the postseason? A little bit, but the huge benefit I had is that I know the players so well. So even if I had to go through MLB PR to get to them, I was still able to kind of pull a guy aside and say, "Hey, you have a quick second?" My relationships with the guys made it a lot easier.

You travel with the team. I hear someone likes to play flight attendant. Yup. A lot of people don't know this, but Ryan Dempster is also a standup comedian. This is insider info, but he gets on the intercom and pretends he's part of the crew or does a whole routine. It's always hilarious.

Personal highlight of the World Series? Game Six, running out onto the field. I was able to get my dad on-field access, and he was one of the first people I saw when I was running out to get my postgame interviews. We hugged, and he's such a huge baseball fan; the look in his eyes was something I'll never forget.

Most prized piece of sports memorabilia? I guess maybe the gold-plated Champagne they gave away to the players when they won. I was able to get a bottle.

Are you getting a World Series ring? I think I am. I spoke with the folks at NESN, and they said I should be getting one. I'm still trying to decide if I go for the girls' size or get one of the massive ones and wear it around my neck.

The grossest thing about the locker room? It doesn't always smell very good.

Best bar in Boston to watch a Red Sox game? When I was at UMass and we couldn't afford tickets for Fenway, we'd just head down to the Cask 'n Flagon. But recently when there was a Fox or ESPN game, I'd go over to Remy's and hang out on the rooftop, which is awesome.

Toughest part of your job? Just the grind of it. From February to November, you don't really have a day off. And yes, you're watching baseball, but people probably don't realize that for a 7 o'clock game, I get to Fenway at 2 o'clock, and I'm not leaving until after midnight. When you do that every single day, and throw in all the travel, it's more grueling than it might seem.

You've covered the Super Bowl and the World Series. Which has better swag? I'm biased, but the World Series.

You're obviously a rabid sports fan, but is there one you can't stand? Not that I can't stand it. I just don't understand tennis well enough. I get bored watching it. I worked on NASCAR at ESPN, and I fell in love with it, so I would probably love tennis if I were more familiar.

Who's the Red Sox player you feel closest to and why? David Ortiz. He's been like a big brother to me. My first day on the job, first day of spring training last year, he came up to me in the clubhouse and said, "Meet me in the dugout in 10 minutes." I was petrified. I remember calling my dad and saying, "Umm, David Ortiz wants to talk to me." We sat there for almost an hour, and he told me what I needed to do, what not to do, and gave me a ton of advice. He's always had my back.

How many times have you gotten a beer or Champagne shower? Two in the regular season from Shane Victorino, and then three times in the clubhouse for postgame celebrations.

"That's one of the things that makes this team so amazing. What you see is pretty much what you get."

If you didn't cover baseball, what would you want to cover? The NFL.

Most shocking dirt you have on a player? There really isn't anything, and that's one of the things that makes this team so amazing. What you see on the field is pretty much what you get. So, yes, you get to know them really well, but I've yet to be shocked by anything.

If you played baseball, what position would you be? Pitcher. I like to be in charge.

One thing you'd change about the game? I'd figure out a way to make the games shorter.

The network doesn't dress you. Do you ever see yourself afterward and say, "That outfit was a miss." Yeah, that happens. But luckily my best friend and college roommate is very smart fashion-wise, so I take a picture on my phone and send it to her before leaving for the game, and she'll tell me what to change.

Tell me a secret about Jerry Remy. What you see on TV, if you multiply it by 10, is reality. He's a comedian. Oh, and he's a really good dancer! Don dances with his arms in the air, and Jerry's all about the hips. Jerry's got some moves.

Funniest thing you've ever seen at a game? Well, the seventh, eighth and ninth innings are always funny when people have been drinking the whole time.

Beauty secret? I don't wash my face. I don't like products and chemicals and soaps.

What about the makeup? I let it ride.

Do you ever get sick of baseball? No. I think anything you end up putting your all into, you love. So you eat, breathe, sleep and dream it. On my days off, I sit at home and watch the game. Once you're a part of it, you're all in. In fact, I miss it now. ◆

Different strokes of genius

SOME SPECIAL GUESTS are staying at the InterContinental Boston this winter. In partnership with the Martin Lawrence Gallery, the waterfront hotel is hosting works by three kings of pop art—Andy Warhol, Takashi Murakami and Philippe Berthо—for the lobby exhibit Pop! Goes Boston. Warhol's famous screen prints of Muhammad Ali, the Marx brothers and, yes, Santa mingle with Murakami's doe-eyed Mr. DOB characters and Berthо's trompe l'oeil serigraphs. And RumBa, the hotel's champagne and rum bar, is serving up three new signature cocktails to pair with the eye candy. (We're partial to the Pop Illusionist, a cucumber concoction that gets its kick from peppercorn-infused simple syrup.) Drink it in through April 30. / Jemma Douglas

Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

RED-HOT RERUNS This month, when Ricky Ricardo calls out, "Lucy, I'm home!" home will be a Boston stage. In I Love Lucy, Live on Stage, theatergoers become a live studio audience at the Desilu soundstage, watching the cast recreate "The Benefit" and "Lucy Has Her Eyes Examined," two classic I Love Lucy episodes. Transported to 1952, they'll get a behind-the-scenes look at the television show, hear classic songs like "Babalu" and even take in era-appropriate advertising jingles from the Crystaltone Singers between scenes. Relive the magic of the redheaded comedy queen offscreen through Dec. 22 at the Citi Emerson Colonial Theatre. | Jemma Douglas

SOUTHERN SOJOURN

With a shower and a clean pair of pants, you'll already be one step ahead of the Soggy Bottom Boys, the central characters in the Coen brothers' tribute to a Greek epic. O Brother, Where Art Thou? reimagines Homer's Odyssey by bringing the tale to the 1930s Deep South, with toe-tapping tunes, buckets of Dapper Dan pomade and seductive sirens. George Clooney stars as Ulysses, the smarmy criminal who escapes from jail with his idiot cohorts in search of treasure. Memorable performances from John Goodman as the Cyclops and Holly Hunter as Ulysses' long-suffering wife round out the all-star cast. Seek some Southern comfort when the film screens during the Brattle Theatre's Complete Coens retrospective on Dec. 14. Jemma Douglas

Reviews by Sean Burns

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

All Is Lost ★★★★ Breathtaking in its simplicity, this riveting tale of survival at sea stars Robert Redford, a leaky boat...and that's pretty much that. Conveniently rebuking the banal Screenwriting 101 character notes and clunky symbolism that dragged Gravity down to Earth, writer-director J.C. Chandor's sophomore effort stars Redford as a nameless sailor, alone on the Indian Ocean when his yacht is struck by a stray storage container. What follows is wordless problem-solving with endless resourcefulness, as things rapidly proceed from bad to worse. The 77-year-old Sundance kid delivers a performance of expert physicality, devoid of dialogue save for a couple of SOS calls and one marvelously cathartic expletive. Redford brings his five decades of stardom to the fore. He's so magnetic, yet at times shockingly frail, you can't take your eyes off him. Chandor's unfussy direction remains focused on the tasks at hand, allowing viewers space to forge their own allegorical interpretations. Alternating between white-knuckle suspense and ghostly contemplation, All Is Lost is a spellbinding exercise in pure cinema. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Blue Is the Warmest Color ★★★★ First love's seismic qualities have seldom been captured with such immersive abandon as in Abdellatif Kechiche's Cannes Film Festival Palme D'Or winner, a 179-minute sprawl of heartbreak shot on a vast, widescreen panorama that scarcely strays six inches from a young woman's face. Blue Is the Warmest Color charts the ardent sexual awakening and eventual crushing despair of Adèle (Adèle Exarchopoulos). She's a book-smart working-class teenager who can already tell things aren't clicking with her boyfriend, when one day she's gobsmacked by the sight of butch, blue-haired Emma (Léa Seydoux). What follows is a rapturous exploration, rendered in giddy, almost impossibly shallow-focus close-ups that make the rest of the world go away, plus a few superheroic sex scenes. Exarchopoulos' performance is something of a miracle, with every raw, unfiltered feeling rippling across that yearning, expressive face. Kechiche's camera never flinches, filming a fairly familiar coming-of-age tale as if through a microscope, the proximity pumping up emotions to a point where everything feels like it's happening for the very first time. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Blue Jasmine ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature became a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on

Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Captain Phillips ★★★ 1/2 In April 2009, the cargo freighter Maersk Alabama was hijacked by four Somali pirates. Unable to control the ship, they fled in a lifeboat, holding Capt. Richard Phillips for ransom. Before reaching shore, a team of Navy SEALs put an abrupt end to the hostage negotiations. Director Paul Greengrass' harrowing, bluntly titled Captain Phillips is a tricky picture with a lot on its mind, at times both pulse-pounding and deeply mournful. It reminded me of Zero Dark Thirty in the way it rewires action-movie conventions to remove any trace of triumphalism, and manages to keep you on the edge of your seat even though everybody already knows the ending. The final scenes are overpowering, with Greengrass mercilessly tightening the suspense screws as Tom Hanks fearlessly goes to emotional places we've never seen in his entire career. It's a brutal knockout of an ending, bold enough to leave you with the nagging impression that good hasn't conquered evil so much as a few mosquitoes have been swatted. This film sticks in your gut. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Dallas Buyers Club ★★★ 1/2 In the most miraculous career resurrection not precipitated by Quentin Tarantino, Matthew McConaughey has abruptly transformed himself from shirtless rom-com himbo to an expertly sleazy, electrifying screen presence. These days he's exuding an infectiously naughty sense of self-delight that serves him well in director Jean-Marc Vallée's somewhat schematic and a bit too crowd-pleasing take on the early days of the AIDS crisis. McConaughey, starved to an alarming fraction of his body weight, stars as a hard-partying boy diagnosed with HIV and given 30 days to live. Never one to follow protocol, he starts out buying stolen AZT from crooked hospital orderlies in parking lots and eventually ends up smuggling unapproved drugs across all sorts of borders in a variety of silly costumes as part of a rather ingenious entrepreneurial gambit. Craig Borten and Melisa Wallack's screenplay follows the template of every Bill Murray slobs vs. snobs comedy from the 1980s, except this time people are dying. Dallas Buyers Club is sometimes terribly overwritten yet always admirably underplayed. And McConaughey is just heroic. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Ender's Game ★★ The seminal 1985 science-fiction novel by renowned loudmouth bigot Orson Scott Card gets a dutiful big-screen blow-up from director Gavin Hood, who previously helmed that unwatchable first Wolverine movie. This is a sterile-looking vessel for overlong expository sequences, detailing a future world in which Earth has been attacked by angry alien arachnids and mankind's last hope for interstellar battle is an army of children, because they're better at video games or something. Hugo's Asa Butterfield stars as the brilliant prodigy molded into a baby sociopath by Harrison Ford's gruff Captain Graff. Ford and Viola Davis discuss the themes of the novel at great length, in case you need to write a paper on it for homework, while Butterfield and True Grit's Hailee Steinfeld play a lot of zero-gravity laser tag as practice. For those unfamiliar with Card's story, there's a jaw-dropping "I can't believe they went there" twist at the end that's such a thoughtful provocation it's almost worth sitting through all this dross to get there. Almost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Enough Said ★★★ 1/2 A bittersweet farewell to the great James Gandolfini, this romance from writer-director Nicole Holofcener is funny, sad and wise about the crazy ways we torment ourselves in this thing called love. But unlike most synthetic rom-coms, Enough Said is uniquely attuned to the weary rhythms of middle age—it's about the surprise of finding someone when you've already been around the block a few times. Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a swank Los Angeles neighborhood. Gandolfini is the slovenly hunk who steals her heart. He's a big, slightly sad guy who seems to have settled for his lot in life years ago, but he's now surprised and delighted by the sudden arrival of this neurotic mess. Their chemistry is magic. She's all sharp right angles; he's a round Barcalounger Buddha. Louis-Dreyfus and Gandolfini's first date is one of the most purely pleasurable sequences I've seen this year, with two jaded, cautious people lowering their defenses and feeling each other out. Just lovely. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Go for Sisters ★★★ A return to form for independent-film icon John Sayles, Go for Sisters is an absorbing, well-researched snapshot of the American class struggle with excellent performances and an evocative sense of time and place. It's also a little bit dull and in the end feels like less than the sum of many admirable parts. In other words, it's a John Sayles movie. LisaGay Hamilton stars as a no-nonsense parole officer whose troubled vet son has gone missing and is now the prime suspect in a meth-related murder. She calls in a favor from a high school pal and recovering addict (Yolanda Ross), attempting to track down her boy before the police catch him first. It's no great shakes as a thriller, but the people in this movie feel specific, giving a sense of full lives lived before the opening credits. Only John Sayles would write a car chase in which the characters have to stop and get gas. For that reason alone it's good to have him back. (At Kendall Square.)

Gravity ★★★ Alfonso Cuarón's first film since 2006's Children of Men is a technical astonishment, and it's easy to see why it's been five years in the making. Gravity is first and foremost a wonder to watch, demanding to be seen on the largest screen possible. As a technological milestone, Gravity is astounding. As a movie, it's pretty OK. Sandra Bullock and George Clooney star as astronauts stranded in space after a terrifying hailstorm of Russian satellite debris makes a mess of their mission. Gravity is for all intents and purposes a computer-animated movie, with actual photography of the actors' heads stuck in the middle of the most photo-realistic CGI that I have ever seen. But then about halfway through, Gravity decides it needs to be "about" something. Yet the thunderous banality of this screenplay cannot detract from the accomplishment of Cuarón's filmmaking. I've honestly never seen anything like it, the rootless camera so indifferent to the characters, inviting us to just dwell for a bit in the vast, airless emptiness of space. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Great Beauty ★★★★ A monumental act of hubris even more impressive for being pulled off so gloriously, director Paolo Sorrentino's dazzling fantasia serves as a sort-of sequel to Federico Fellini's La Dolce Vita, one of the greatest of all films. Sad-eyed Toni Servillo stars as Jep Gambardella, a one-time novelist and dapper darling of Rome's social scene who has drifted through the past four decades in a haze of beautiful women, extravagant luxury and killer parties. But Jep's 65th birthday has knocked our old hedonist for a loop, and suddenly the sweet life ain't what it used to be. Sorrentino appropriates Fellini's rambling, anecdotal structure and pet obsessions: plenty of curvy ladies, circuses and juxtapositions of the sacred with the profane. But The Great Beauty is more than mere homage. Filtered through the filmmaker's own specific sensibility, it's a richly symbolic meditation on mortality, aging and precious time wasted. Servillo's weary gaze carries in it an existential ache for all that might have been, and a sad acknowledgement that every party eventually must end. Bravo. (At Kendall Square.)

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★½ What a difference a director makes. When we last caught up with Katniss Everdeen, she was reluctantly killing kids in Seabiscuit helmer Gary Ross' aesthetically ugly, sloppily staged adaptation of Suzanne Collins' young-adult megaseller. One year and a few hundred million dollars later, this series has fallen into the hands of filmmaker

Francis Lawrence, of I Am Legend and the underrated Constantine fame. Lawrence has an eye for striking visuals but has never found a script to match his talent. He doesn't find one here either, but Catching Fire is still a huge improvement over its predecessor in nearly every way. Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss is back, shouldering the burden of martyrdom in a future dystopia where the rich enlist the poor to kill each other off in televised spectacles. Pulpy melodrama continues apace, but this time around with lush, burnished images and a budget to match the ambition. It's quite engrossing until the movie abruptly stops midscene, teasing another sequel coming soon to a theater near you. Sigh, the perils of franchise maintenance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jackass Presents: Bad Grandpa ★★ 1/2 After taking a bow with 2010's gasp-inducing, oddly valedictory Jackass 3D, Johnny Knoxville and some of the boys behind the scenes are back with this feature-length adventure about Irving Zisman. Long a staple of their repertoire, this drunken, potty-mouthed old man is actually Knoxville under heavy prosthetics, horrifying innocent bystanders with his aberrant behavior. The stunts are inspired; less so is the storyline in which Zisman takes a road trip with his precocious grandson, played by a game Jackson Nicoll. I've always adored these Jackass shenanigans and the gang's surrealist spirit. At best they're a modern Three Stooges for dudes who drink during the day, but tethering them to a conventional narrative structure doesn't pay off. Sure, it's a blast to watch Knoxville soil himself, disrupt funerals and coax unsuspecting folks into committing crimes, but this sort of humor plays best as quick blackout sketches. Bad Grandpa feels kind of like watching an old porno, zoning out during the "plot" while you're waiting for the good stuff. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Last Vegas ★★ 1/2 Seniors say the darndest things in director Jon Turtletaub's harmless, calculatedly crowd-pleasing entry in the crazy-old-coots genre. Michael Douglas, Robert De Niro, Morgan Freeman and Kevin Kline star as childhood friends in Sin City for one last bachelor party. Douglas' aging lothario aims to finally tie the knot with a bimbo half his age, much to the consternation of the teasing geezers in his entourage. Don't expect any Hangover-styled hijinks, as these four not-so-bad grandpas stroll through a few family-friendly, mildly amusing comic interludes largely predicated upon product placement and the gang's antiquated notions of Rat Pack cool. Douglas gamely sends up his spray-tanned vanity, making eyes at Mary Steenburgen's sassy lounge singer. Freeman busts some surprising moves on the dance floor, Kline shoulders the film's blessedly few Viagra jokes and De Niro acts a bit more alert than his late-career somnambulist standard. It's a cast of relaxed old pros with easy chemistry, all of whom seem to be having a great deal of fun. The feeling is almost mutual. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★ 1/2 A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy returning servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At West Newton.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you

removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 15 minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Thor: The Dark World ★½ At least 60 percent of Thor: The Dark World consists of characters frantically running around trying to explain the plot to each other, hurling monster-sized gobs of exposition regarding the increasingly arbitrary rules of this fantasy universe. Everything works until it doesn't. And then it does again. You can do something until you can't anymore, but then later you can again. Some people die and stay dead. Others get to come back, if they're popular enough with test-screening audiences. Eventually, I threw up my hands, accepting that literally anything could happen at any given moment. As the cast wallows in tedious mythological explaining in front of kitschy CGI backdrops, you realize this has more in common with the Star Wars prequels than just Natalie Portman. The semi-apocalyptic claptrap is rendered almost unwatchably murky by yet another cheap 3-D post-conversion, but the only moments that linger in the memory are throwaway human gestures like Chris Hemsworth's Thor hanging his hammer on a coat rack, or politely catching a ride on a crowded subway. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SOUL SISTER Sister Sparrow and the Dirty Birds have left the nest. Raised by musician parents, lead vocalist and songwriter Arleigh Kincheloe and her harmonica-playing brother Jackson built a big band to match her powerful pipes. After cultivating a following from their Brooklyn home base, the high-energy eight-piece have brought their soulful sound across the country, playing Bonnaroo and the Voodoo Experience and opening for acts like the Black Keys and the Avett Brothers. Now fresh off the release of their new EP Fight, they're headlining in Cambridge alongside fellow funk-rockers Rustic Overtones. Fly away to the Sinclair Dec. 6. / Maria Sciema

LAW AND ORDER

One of Boston's most famous murder trials is back in the public eye thanks to a Parkman-Webster Murder Case exhibit. Visitors can form their own opinions on the 1849 murder, the gruesome details and high-class players of which drew nearly 60,000 spectators to the courtroom. The exhibit lays out the entire timeline of the case, from the wealthy Dr. Parkman's initial disappearance after a debt dispute, through the trial, to the highly publicized execution of Harvard professor Webster. It explores many legal questions, including the landmark precedents of Justice Shaw's rulings on the legitimacy of eyewitness alibis and the difference between manslaughter and murder. BOOKS & POETRY

Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

CALIFORNIA DREAMIN'

Mattilda Bernstein Sycamore is now based in Seattle, but the author and activist may have left her heart in San Francisco. Both love letter and breakup letter, The End of San Francisco chronicles her journey to the city famed as a haven for queer culture, her departure in disappointment nearly 20 years later and the wild days in between—from the starts and stops of gay-rights activism to the dot-com boom and bust. With vignettes that skip around in time and shift from prose to poetry, the memoir recalls the radical hopes of the '90s and Sycamore's growth into an outspoken organizer. See Sycamore continue to push the boundaries on Dec. 11 at the Harvard Book Store. Hannah Weintraub

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made from scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisihe of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specially

JEWELS MEAN NEVER HAVING TO SAY YOU'RE SORRY

There was nary a tote bag or coffee mug in sight when WBUR hosted its annual gala to celebrate its partnership with NPR at the Sheraton Boston.

Among the familiar faces spotted during the cocktail hour: presenting sponsors Hal and Jodi Hess, co-chairs Cathy and Jim Stone, Morning Edition's Susan Stamberg, senior All Things Considered host Robert Siegel, NPR correspondent Kelly McEvers, Celtics legend Jo Jo White, honoree Paul La Camera, On Point host Tom Ashbrook, sports writer extraordinaire Dan Shaughnessy, ex-Trader Joe's exec and radio crusader Doug Rauch, reformed male model Dean Bragonier, the delightfully named Tiziana Dearing, ringleted beauty Marcel Quiroga, children's book author Kathryn Lasky and her husband, National Geographic photographer Chris Knight, Harvard B-School bigshot Howard Stevenson, the aptly named Oz Mondejar, Cuban chef Johnny Verlinden and others of an equally elevated ilk.

The signature cocktail was a New Fashioned—bourbon, bitters and OJ—which packed a punch and paved the way for dinner and the awards ceremony, but it was the raffle prize of honkin'-big sapphire earrings that had several women atwitter.

As one put it: "My husband would have to do something really bad for him to buy me those."

LET BIVALVES BE BIVALVES

It's not often that we get invited to a party at the Microsoft NERD Center, so of course we said yes when Target Cancer invited us to its annual fundraiser.

The space, which one guest described as "very Star Trek: The Original Series," was packed to the rafters with chic geeks and hot young things, on hand to honor über-lawyer R. Robert Popeo for helping the battle against rare cancers. Among them: container gardening guru Sara Townsend and her handsome other half, Dave, the exquisite Liza Tague, pen-for-hire Karen Dempsey, unapologetic Yalie Janet Wu, broadcasting blonde Sue Brady Hartigan, party fixture CJ Husk, the mysterious Michael Halal, and a hat trick of hot violinists, namely Karen Stokke, Josh Garstka and Abe Dewing.

Despite the generally high IQ, there was one woman who didn't know the difference between a clam and an oyster, but as another guest pointed out: "She's obviously not from around here. She put her wine down to eat a littleneck. Native New Englanders have a gene that allows them to balance a drink and a plate from the raw bar."

I'LL TAKE TWO

Some people drive sports cars worth more than your yearly salary, and thankfully, some of them are also magnanimous enough to support Music Drives Us, a charity that provides music education for the underserved, which held a major hoo-ha at the Ferrari/Maserati of New England Dealership in Norwood.

Hosted by founder and car czar Ernie Boch Jr. and his main squeeze, Enza Sambataro, the evening attracted an A-list crowd that included Aerosmith drummer Joey Kramer and the luscious Linda, smoldering bluesman James Montgomery, music mogul Ralph Jaccodine and brunette beauty Vicki Adjami, video production hotshot Erin Hayes, the pretty-in-pink Diana Feghali, restaurateur Samantha Faro, Bentley peddler Paul Downey, and diamond dealer Donna DePrisco, who tippled while tasting small bites by the likes of Ming Tsai and Anthony Ambrose.

During the speaking program, someone asserted that "music is the only truly universal language," to which someone else responded, "I thought sex was."

"I'm about one drink away from a pithy quote," said another attendee, while the evening's funniest remark came from the guy who looked at a yellow Ferrari and said, "I'll take delivery tomorrow. I don't think I should be driving home tonight."

GAME ON

As shocking as it may seem, The Ultimate Tailgate Party—a benefit for the food-rescue organization Lovin' Spoonfuls—doesn't actually involve a football game.

Held under a tent in front of Sam's on the waterfront, it does involve 16 chefs offering upscale versions of their favorite gameday foods, paired with signature cocktails and entertainment.

It was a strictly varsity party crowd, boasting the likes of dashing doctor Camilo Gutierrez and the stunning Gabriela Santos, city councilor-elect Josh Zakim, the flawless Jennifer Yukimura, WBZ-TV babe Lisa Hughes and her shutterbug husband, Mike Casey, restaurateurs Josh Childs and Jeremy Sewall, former Patriot lineman Matt Light, the criminally blue-eyed David Drubner, fashionistas Marci Duarte and Gina Fox, Teutonic funboy William Grote, cheese whiz Brad Wasik and his gorgeous bride, Arlan, Chamonix ski bum Alex Ciccolo, and a slew of high-profile hipsters.

By halftime, everyone was well-fed and well-lubricated. And when the two-minute warning reared its ugly head, no one wanted to go home, so the party relocated to nightspots all over town.

Said one guest: "Monday Night Football is definitely going to be preceded by Monday morning hangover." ◆

From the Top / Andrew Rimas

ADIEU, ADIEU

I'VE GROWN UP WORKING FOR THIS MAGAZINE. Uncharitable wags would say I've grown old doing it. The Improper has given me a home, a livelihood and even a beautiful wife, whom I met when I invited her to appear on the cover. (Note to singles: Try this!) But having held titles from intern to editor—and having written approximately 90 of these letters—I've decided to leave before I repeat myself again about the connection between ontological materialism and top-shelf gin. Life, as I've often pointed out, is gallingly short, but change is evidence that it trundles onward. It's a good idea to keep trundling.

Editing The Improper has been one of the greatest privileges I've ever known. Yes, there were moments of hot, black shame, like when I failed at duck-hunting, or at riding mechanical bulls, or at cooking risotto for Barbara Lynch. But I like to think about the successes, like all the punny headlines, or the fun travel columns, or when I gave myself a Boston's Best award just because. It was an outrageous pleasure to write about the chefs and bartenders who make this city a true beacon of gluttony. The best part of the job, though, was collaborating with the talented, hard-working people in this office, among the most talented and hard-working of whom are the excellent Matt Martinelli, who'll be stepping up as managing editor, and the incomparable Jacqueline Houton, to whom I relinquish this page.

This issue also says goodbye to our cover subject, Mayor Tom Menino, and it shows how Ezra's gone all Soames Forsyte and become a Man of Property. Times indeed change, as they should.

In parting, I humbly thank the entire Improper family for so many wonderful years. And to you, dearest reader, I bid an affectionate farewell.

Andrew Rimas, Editor

MAYOR-ELECT SHARES
BIG PLANS FOR BOSTON »»

DOT CHARM

Mayor Marty

When Marty Walsh, 46, is sworn in this January, he'll be the first new mayor in Boston in more than 20 years. The former state representative from Dorchester has big ideas as he takes the reins from Mayor Tom Menino. In an interview at Old City Hall with The Improper, he opened up about personal ambition, the city's arts scene, City Hall and Downtown Crossing. / Matt Martinelli

WHEN DID YOU DECIDE YOU WANTED TO BE MAYOR? Growing up as a little kid, probably. When Jim Brett lost (in the 1993 race), I wasn't in politics at the time, but then I became a state representative. Once I was elected, clearly mayor was something I wanted to aspire to and potentially run for someday, not knowing if it would ever happen because the mayor was in office for so long. I kind of put an artificial timeline on when I would make a decision to continue politically or do something else. Ironically, right around this year was going to be that decision for me.

ONE CAMPAIGN ISSUE WAS BOSTON LAGGING BEHIND OTHER MAJOR CITIES IN ARTS FUNDING. HOW DO YOU BRIDGE THAT GAP? We're going to do some great things with the arts. We're going to start with a cabinet level position for the arts commissioner. The budget process will start soon, and we'll look at how we can give some dedicated revenue to the arts in Boston. So it's not just where we create a commissioner role and say everyone's happy now. There has to be some funding there as well. The arts community seems to be very excited about it. The arts in Boston are a way to kind of promote the city. So I really want to do a lot in that area.

IS THERE A NEIGHBORHOOD THAT MIGHT BE THE NEXT TO TAKE A HUGE JUMP, LIKE THE SEAPORT? I'd like to see Downtown Crossing go back to the way it was when I was a kid growing up. In the '50s, '60s and '70s, it was really a booming place. In the '80s and '90s it kind of went through a transformation. It's coming back and that's kind of one of the places I want to see come up. And another area I'd really like to focus on is the neighborhoods: Roxbury, Dorchester, Hyde Park, Mattapan. Really, not having a renovation like the Innovation District, but something that brings industry, brings business and brings opportunity to neighborhoods, I'd like to do that. Something like mini-districts.

WHAT ABOUT DOWNTOWN CROSSING APPEALED TO YOU AS A KID? Jordan Marsh, Filene's—we'd come in at the time with my mother, and that's where we went shopping. That was our mall. My father was always working construction in one of those buildings down there. We'd come in town an awful lot to go into those buildings, go to St. Anthony's Shrine. It reminds me that there was always a lot of people there. I'd like to bring that back.

IS THERE ANYWHERE YOU SEND OUT-OF-TOWNERS THAT SAYS, "THIS IS BOSTON"? Hopefully it'll be City Hall. We have a lot of opportunities to do a lot more inviting things in the building and the plaza. Long term, we're going to look and see what we can do. But at least for now, we're going to make it better. People go to the State House all the time. They want to see the golden dome and the character in the building. Outside, I guess you can argue whether there's character in the building or not. If it were designed better—meaning if the plaza looked better—maybe the outside would look better. But when you walk in, it's dreary. That has to change. I walk in there and it's like, "Oh, my God." Maybe it's changes in lighting. Who knows?

WILL YOU TAKE ANOTHER RUN PROPOSING TO YOUR GIRLFRIEND, LORRIE? I never took a first run at her.

OH, BECAUSE IT HAD BEEN REPORTED... Yeah, the reporters are all over that story, and we'll break it at some point. We'll see what happens.

FOR THE FULL INTERVIEW WITH MARTY WALSH, go to improper.com.

SWELL SECONDS

SWEET ON WELLESLEY

DAVE BECKER'S SECOND RESTAURANT isn't quite ready for its close-up—in fact, the owner of Needham's Sweet Basil would prefer not to reveal its name or its precise location in Wellesley. But he's still more than willing to talk about his latest project. It will share a "similar vibe and price point" with Sweet Basil, but the food will be "Eastern Mediterranean: Greek, Lebanese, Israeli," he says. At 100 seats, it'll be twice the size of its predecessor. And instead of a BYOB policy, the new spot will feature a full liquor license and bar. "I already have bottles of weird homemade tinctures" to create cocktails, Becker says, adding that he's partial to "real cherry juice mixed with really good bourbon. It tastes like a Manhattan, but without the maraschino cherry."

As for decor, he plans a color scheme of gray, white and navy blue, "with a flourish of bright color," including turquoise plates made by Becker himself. And rather than hiring a new chef, Becker says he'll be tapping the staff he already has. "I feel kinda guilty claiming to be the chef now [at Sweet Basil]. I have four guys capable of running their own kitchen." The new place, he says, will give them "room to grow."

But isn't there a well-publicized shortage of cooks and other restaurant staff? "That's horse s," he declares. "Pay people more; don't yell at them and beat them up. Say please and thank you. Give 'em paid vacation. I give everyone, including the dishwashers, paid vacation. You don't have to be a gluttonous pig! Pay people more, and they'll work harder for you."

CROWDING THE TABLE

'Tis the season to host parties for large groups, so the 40th-anniversary edition of Cooking for Crowds is a timely addition to the cookbook shelf. Written by Merry White, now an anthropology professor at Boston University, and illustrated by Edward Koren of The New Yorker cartoon fame, the book provides easy directions for preparing a wide range of meals for anywhere from six to 50 guests. Recipes that may have seemed cutting-edge four decades ago—chilaquiles, spanakopita—are now mainstream, but still tasty and useful.

'Tis better to give than receive.
In theory.

Patrón Tequila is made in small batches using only the finest Weber Blue Agave. The final product is an extremely refined tequila – a gift you can feel good about giving. Or receiving.

RULE OF 3-D: MakerBot's Boston store offers demos of the printers

Solid Ideas

MakerBot Boston
144 Newbury St., Boston
(617-307-7828) makerbot.com

3-D printing has had an impressive year, with headlines touting amazing innovations (3-D-printed organs!) and unnerving ones (3-D-printed guns!), not to mention a nod in the State of the Union. But many of us have yet to see a machine in action.

That may change. Consider last month's opening of the Boston MakerBot store, a showroom for the brand's Digitizer desktop scanners ($1,400) and Replicator desktop printers ($2,199), which transform spools of corn-based plastic into original designs, re-creations of scanned real-world objects, and shared designs made with specs downloaded from the online community Thingiverse. "You had to basically be a tycoon with your own factory, and you had to think in units of tens or hundreds of thousands," MakerBot CEO Bre Pettis says of the traditional manufacturing model. Now, he says, "You can take the things that you imagine and make them real."

Featuring demos and displays, a gumball-style machine that turns out trinkets like a pocket-sized Faneuil Hall, and a soon-to-open photo booth for printing 3-D selfies, the Newbury Street store marks the second retail outlet for the Brooklyn-based company. "Boston is actually one of our core customer locations," Pettis explains. "We've shipped a lot of MakerBots to dorm rooms in Boston. They fit right on top of a mini-fridge!"

Greater Boston, however, is already a hub for 3-D printing. So while we welcome the Brooklyn import, we thought we'd tip our hat to some local ventures. / Jacqueline Houton

3DOODLER
Slated to debut in February, this seven-ouncer from Somerville's WobbleWorks is billed as the world's first 3-D-printer pen. It draws in the air and on surfaces, extruding plastic that solidifies in seconds with help from a built-In fan.

FIGULO
This South Boston biz prints, fires and glazes ceramics—from gleaming tiles to intricate tableware—for architects, artists, designers and everyday consumers. Founded in 2011, it was acquired by big industry player 3D Systems just this month.

FORMLABS
Having clinched a $19 million round of financing in October, this Somerville startup from MIT Media Lab vets is set for a March release for its Form 1 desktop printer ($3,299), which uses laser-cured resin instead of molten plastic.

Drink of the Moment
SEAFARER

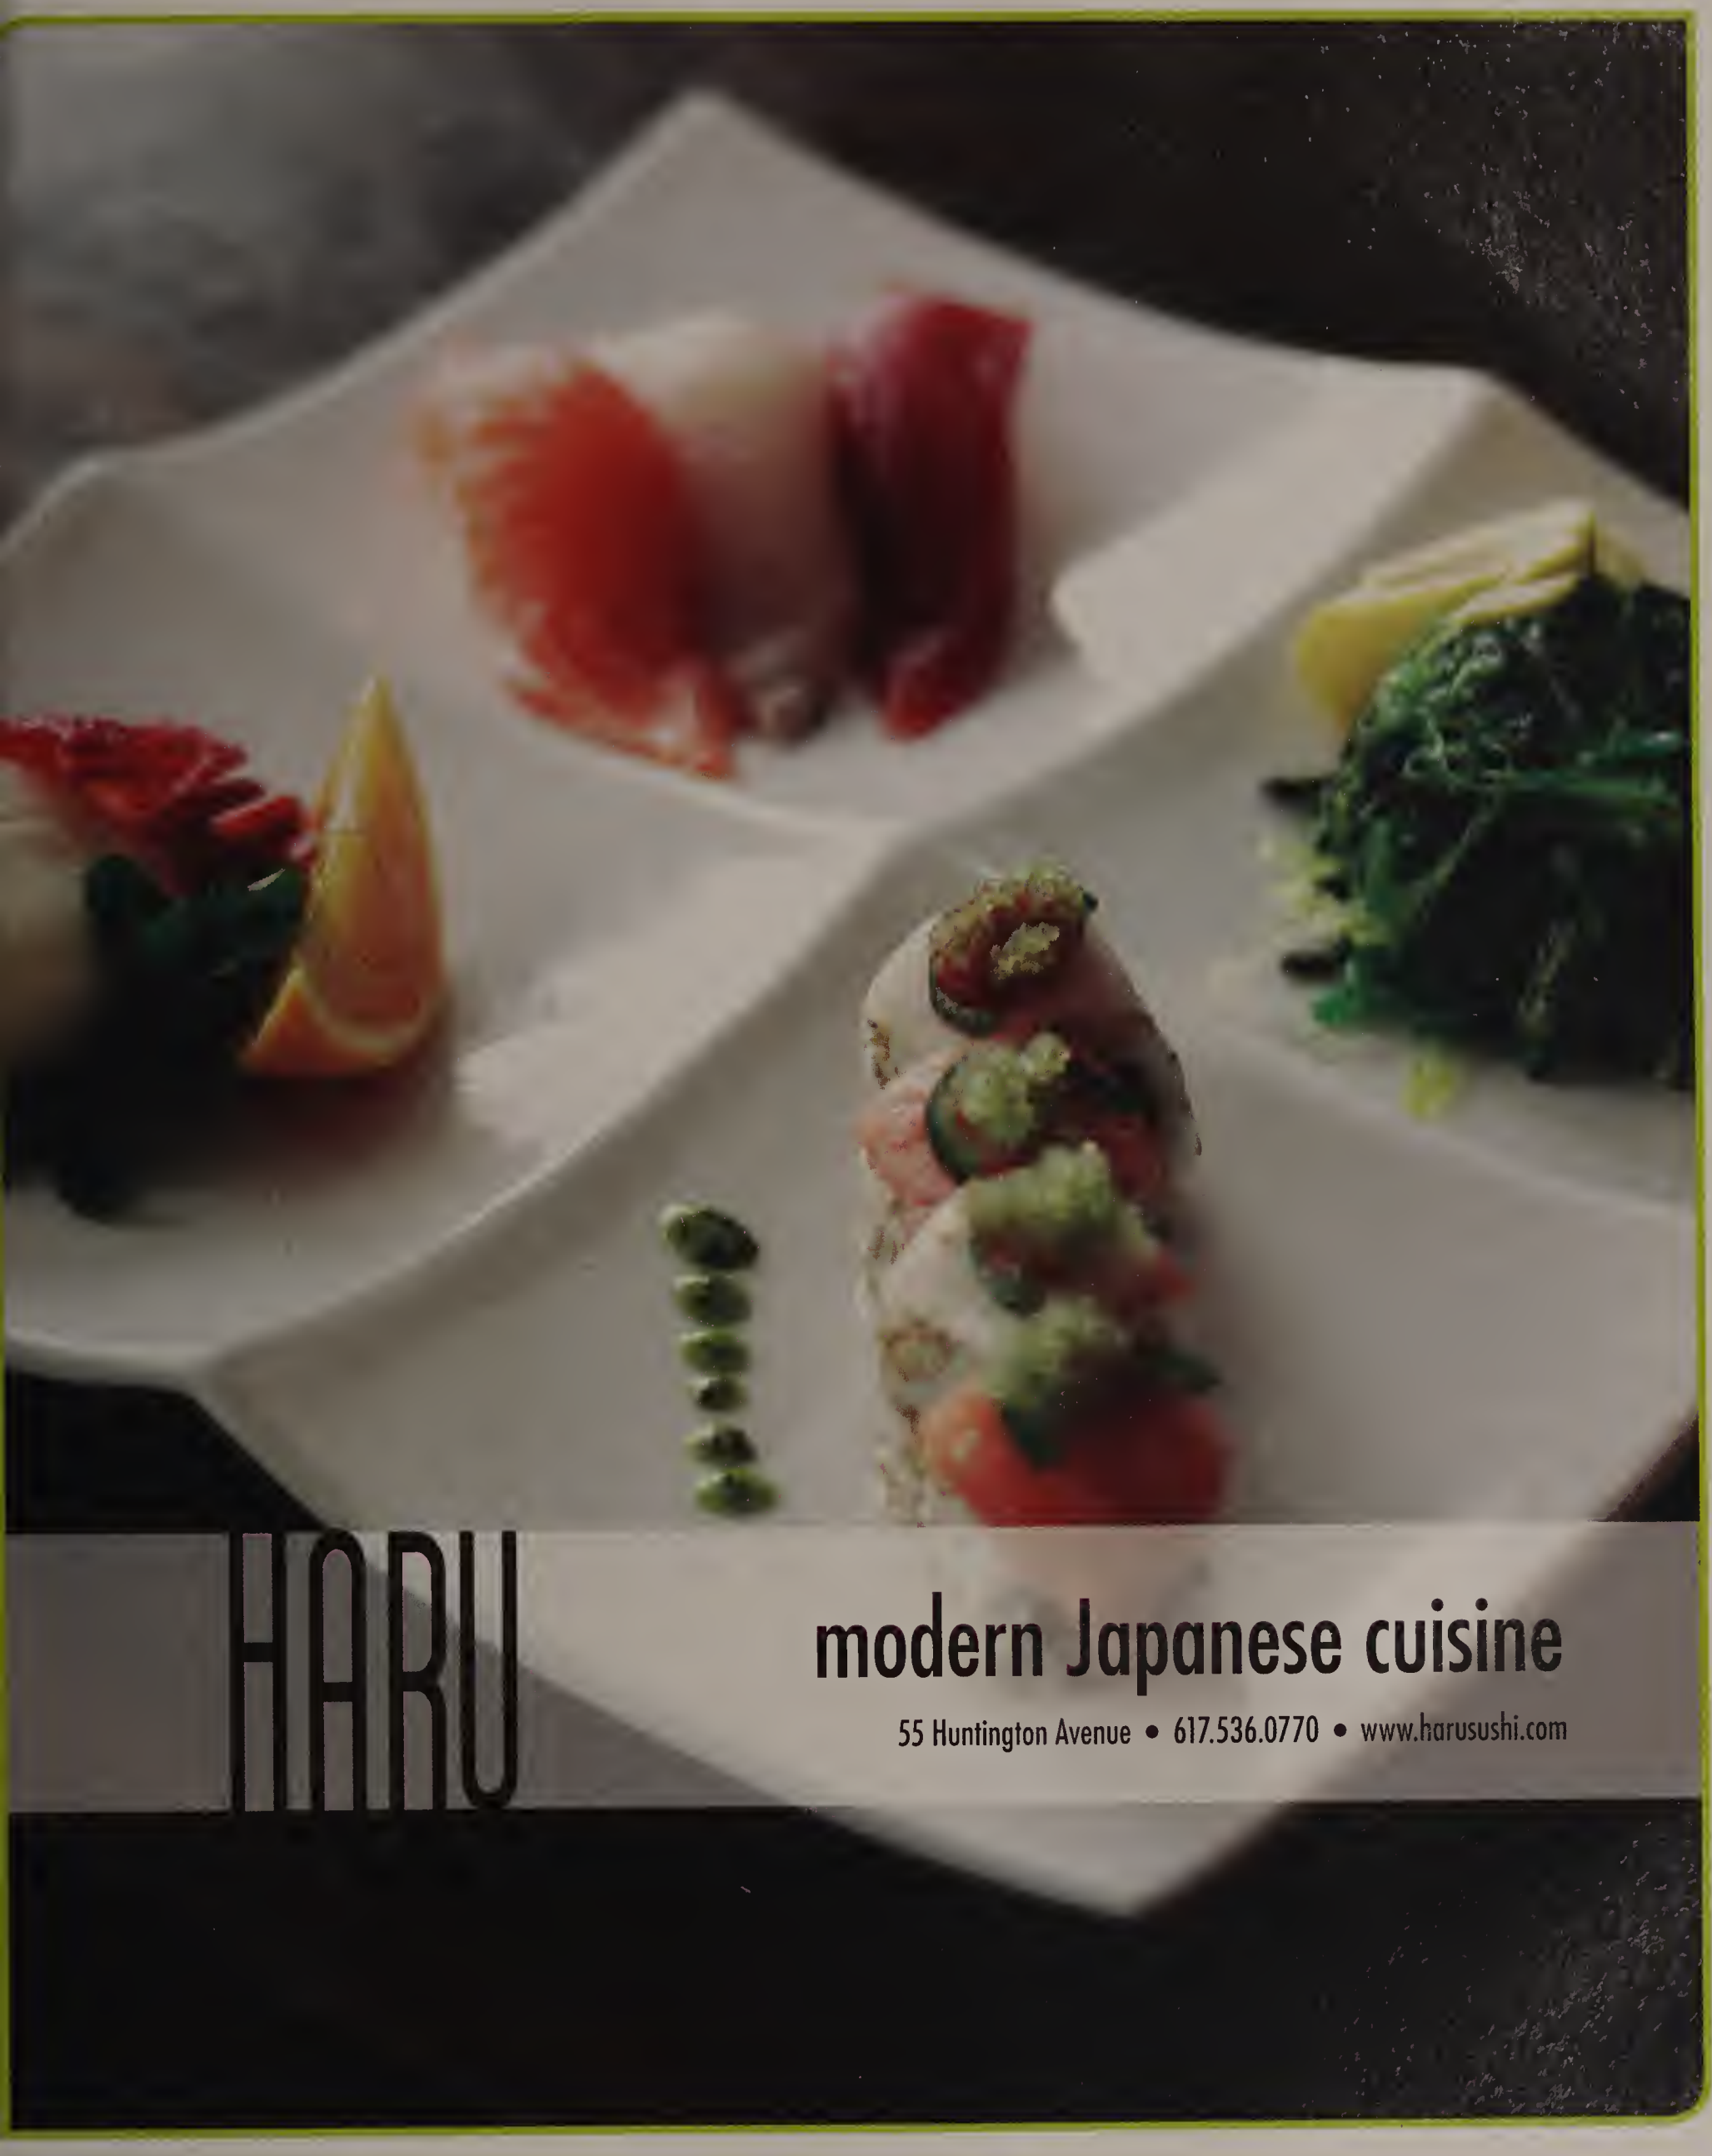
PRICE: $12

INVENTOR: Eastern Standard bar manager Kevin Martin

INGREDIENTS: Lustau East India sherry, Carpano Antica, housemade rosé vermouth, salt

CONCEPT: Sherry was developed as a traveling beverage, a wine that could withstand the heat and rattle of a long sea voyage. "It's the same with vermouth," Martin says. "The combination, with a pinch of salt, is very deserving."

LOW TECH: Mixed in a chilled pint glass and poured into a chilled highball, the drink never touches ice. Hence, it's not watered down.



SECRET WEAPON: The house vermouth is made with brandy infused with strawberries for 48 hours, mixed with southern Spanish grenache and ruby port before a judicious bombardment with flavoring agents. It's got wormwood for bitterness, thyme for herbal notes and orange zest for zest. There's a lot happening.

EASTERN STANDARD
528 Comm. Ave., Boston
(617-532-9100)
easternstandardboston.co

TASTE: Dried fruit on the nose, then a deep plunge into the sensory buffet of the blended wines: dark chocolate, pecans, bitter orange peel. There's a lot happening. But the real interest is in the mouthfeel. "When you chill something with sugars, it has a tendency to thicken," says Martin. Lacking water, the drink's viscosity is even further pronounced. "It's magical."

PAIR IT WITH: "It's a meaty kind of drink," Martin says. Order it with the steak frites or the smoky porterhouse. Or just a medium-rare burger. The beef's oils play wonderfully off the dense gravity of the wines, adding earth to the salt. / Andrew Rimas

BIG CHILL: Eastern Standard's Seafarer is served neat in a chilled highball.

EXPERIENCE COUNTS

THE MERCHANT COURTS BUSINESS.

THE KITCHEN AT THE MERCHANT, opening soon on Franklin Street, will be making almost all its fare from scratch. But it's Matt Foley, the man inside the kitchen, that might be the best started-over-from-scratch story to come out of the Financial District spot.

Foley, now 31, was once the executive chef at the now-shuttered Citron in Providence. But at 25, he realized that despite his lofty title, he didn't have the cooking chops he needed to truly soar. Foley quit his job and took a big pay cut to work at Radius, where he spent two years under Michael Schlow. He followed that up with four years under Tony Maws at Craigie on Main (including nearly three years as sous chef) and 10 months at Sycamore, where he met co-owner Shane Smyth, who will also be co-owner at the Merchant.

"When I was 25, I wasn't happy where I was culinary wise, but I still ran a kitchen and got that experience at an early age," Foley says. "I've taken the best from my experience since then, and I've forgotten the stuff I didn't like."

Befitting Foley's big goals is a big space that served for more than a century as a leather store—hence the Merchant name. High-top tables near the windows are joined by a 40-foot bar on one side of the room and more formal dining spots on the opposite side. There's a semi-private dining room in back, and a downstairs dining room and kitchen—the site of Foley's most ambitious plans.

All the meat will be cured and smoked in house. Foley pledges the burger will be top-notch, but he's also excited for dishes like steak and eggs, sweetbread nuggets and "rustic" desserts. There will be salads, sandwiches ($10-$12) and more for the lunch rush, while 36 beers on tap and a craft cocktail program should appeal to the after-work crowd. The raw bar will be open from 11 am till closing as part of a late-night menu that will change each night. And for dinner, it'll be a full-service brasserie (with most entrees ranging from $20-$24), hopefully drawing in residents from the new high-rises.

"There's going to be nothing standard about our food. Some things that are really simple like a fried-chicken sandwich will be a two-day process here," Foley says. "Pretty much everything we serve will be made here, except for ketchup. I haven't figured out how to make better ketchup than Heinz."

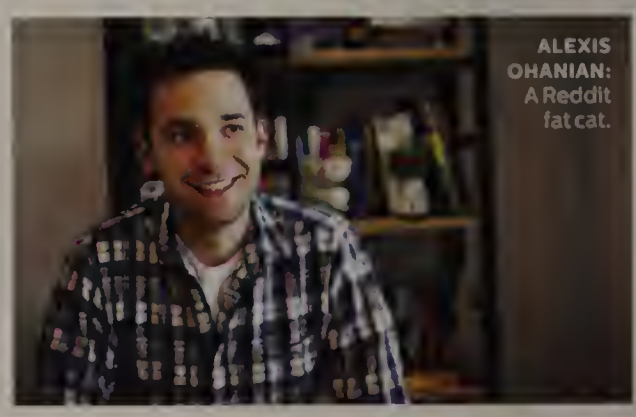
TECHNICALLY SPEAKING



Cat-loving tech guru Alexis Ohanian, who co-founded Reddit in Medford, is now releasing his first book, Without Their Permission.

FORBES* NAMED YOU THE "MAYOR OF THE INTERNET." WHAT WOULD YOU SAY YOUR CAMPAIGN SLOGAN IS? "Cats for everyone." Actually, there are too many cats right now that aren't being adopted, so how about like, "Shelter cats for everyone." And "Spay and neuter," that'd be my other campaign slogan

YOUR NEW BOOK, WITHOUT THEIR PERMISSION, GIVES IDEAS AND TIPS FOR ASPIRING STARTUPS. CAN THERE BE A TRULY ALL-ENCOMPASSING GUIDE FOR ENTREPRENEURS? Oh, definitely not. [I was] really deliberate in making sure I didn't write something that would be irrelevant in five years, or really, in five months. Because the Internet evolves so quickly, there are some core things that are probably going to always matter, [but] the technologies are going to keep changing, the trends are going to keep changing. I don't have a crystal ball, but so much of the secret of success online is being quick to adapt, and being flexible and being comfortable in knowing that the rules, the playbook of this thing, is being written right now by all of us.

YOUR BOOK ALSO CONTAINS SOME OF YOUR OWN DOODLES. HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR DOODLING TECHNIQUE? I do it all on Illustrator these days. The Reddit alien came about because I was bored in marketing class my senior year of college. We didn't even have a website yet; I just knew we needed a mascot. I think being able to get ideas out into the world, in whatever your element is, is what's important. For some people it might be dancing, for some people it might be doodling, for some people it might be writing or painting, but doodling is one area where I enjoy it. I take solace in it and I also wanted to include a lot of doodles in the book because even if someone hated my book, they could still use it as a coloring book. I've been getting submissions every other day from people who've sent me photos of their books covered in colored pencil or crayon. And that's pretty great.

DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE MEME? How do you pick a favorite meme? Probably Business Cat, which shouldn't surprise anyone. Business Cat looks a lot like my cat, and I just like it. It's a pretty standard straightforward one: serious business up top and then something cat-related down below for the twist. / Hannah Sheinberg

Good Eats: Inking Ahead

Andrew Foster, co-owner of Washington Square's newest supper spot, Fairsted Kitchen, jokes about his favorite dish: You should stir the pool of squid ink in the center of the bowl into the surrounding white beans, squid rings and tentacles until it all looks "inedible," he says. He's right. On its own, the glossy, pitch-black ink hits with salt and that rich oceanic funk that eludes vocabulary. Stirring it into the humble beans offsets the umami effect so that you'll want to slurp the murky gray liquid by the spoonful, while cubes of butternut squash, sage and fennel fronds finish with a musty sweetness. / Elizabeth Bomze

High Lawn Farms ★★

Made with milk from Berkshire cows, this local nog is smooth, simple and extra sweet. Purists will love the creamy texture, but it may be too plain for a holiday indulgence.

Hood Pumpkin ★★ ½

The pumpkin puree in this thick concoction creates an unnatural orange hue. A dab of cinnamon adds needed spice, but leaves a slight itch in the back of your throat.

Hints of natural nutmeg and vanilla add a flavorful touch to this organic option. Plus, the lack of chemicals will keep you in Santa's good graces.

Holy cow, this nog easily takes the blue ribbon. With classic glass bottling and a sweet aftertaste that isn't too rich, this extremely creamy nog is one that you won't even need to spike.

What's cooler than giving a unique wine to someone who'll really appreciate it? But this may not be as easy as it appears, particularly if the person on your list is already an enthusiast. The wine has to be something out of the ordinary, not widely available in the market, and it should have a story. Ageability is also a definite plus, as the ideal scenario is for the recipient to save it for sharing, preferably with you. Giving any of these three collectibles will mark you as a man, or woman, of impeccable taste.

CHAPOUTIER HERMITAGE "CHANTE-ALOUETTE," RHONE VALLEY, 2011
White Hermitage is one of those rare insiders' wines, and the incomparable Michel Chapoutier is among the few acknowledged masters of this ultimate rarity category. Pure Marsanne, the 2011 is an unctuous melange of orange, ginger, cooked apple and smoky aromas that tastes a bit decadent and luscious now but will mature until well into the next decade. Its creamy texture and rich honeyed fruit are layered and lingering. This would be quite a treat for chardonnay lovers on your list.

ALFRED GRATIEN BRUT NV
You won't find a less-than-stellar Champagne on the market, but it doesn't take much imagination to give someone one of the popular names. Alfred Gratien, on the other hand, is an artisan family producer whose Brut NV is infused with a perfumed cherry-like earthiness from its high percentage of red grapes. Fermented in small oak casks, this bold, flavorful Champagne is a lovely dinner accompaniment (think smoked fish, lightly spicy Asian fare or scallops in a creamy sauce), and it will age nicely for at least a few years.

LAPOSTOLLE "CLOS APALTA," COLCHAGUA VALLEY, 2009
Owned by the same French family that's produced Grand Marnier since the 19th century, this Chilean winery has been an icon since its 1994 founding. Clos Apalta helped put the country on the wine map in 2008 when Wine Spectator rated it the world's number-one wine. Made from a preponderance of extremely old-vine carmenère, this single-vineyard estate wine is a velvety textured Bordeaux blend that would appeal to anyone with a serious cabernet obsession. Supple, plummy and very bold, with a mineral-accented blackberry note that coats the palate, it's still a baby—but a beautiful one.

WILD THINGS: O'Donnell's home studio

Purveyors: Folk Art

Caroline O'Donnell's floral design business, Wild Folk, is a textbook startup. She's a self-taught, one-woman show working out of her Somerville home. She assembles arrangements on her kitchen table. And she's relied entirely on word-of-mouth for business. But her style—"a wild overgrown garden with purpose"—is sophisticated, and her arrangements, always made from flowers she picked up that morning, are as dazzling as any you'll find in town (and arrive in vintage vases rather than plain-Jane glass). Check out her website for preset combinations (the blooms will change with availability), or let her customize a design to suit your space and taste. / Elizabeth Bomze

DEAR DIARIES

A NOVEL ABOUT FRIENDSHIP, SECRETS AND FAMILY

The Unfinished Work of Elizabeth D.* by Nichole Bernier Published by Crown, 320 pages, $24 hardcover
The author lives outside Boston.

HOW LITTLE WE KNOW ONE ANOTHER! Glimpsing a friend's diaries reveals a private conversation. But when that person has died and bequeathed the sacred and scary task of reading them—as Elizabeth D. does with her friend Kate—the diaries become a dangerous mix of secrecy, revelation and loss.

In this debut novel, both women are married mothers, but Kate never knew about Elizabeth's little sister, who died in a bike accident, with Elizabeth's irresponsibility complicit in the tragedy. Facing Elizabeth's widowed husband, Kate nervously negotiates how to frame—or conceal—such revelations, especially the mysteries preceding her death in a plane crash. Having left her family, including a baby, abruptly behind, Elizabeth was flying to some New Age retreat. But was she using the pretext to connect with an old boyfriend? Worse, she appeared to be secretly suffering from cancer.

Novelist Bernier makes Elizabeth—via the self-therapy of the diaries—a candid, lively, conflicted character. To Kate's chagrin, she doesn't shy from sharing critical views of her friend. The flowing storytelling, including family-and-marriage similarities (Elizabeth's husband was a traveling golfer; Kate's a traveling salesman), explores subjects like random chance, the freezing and melting of time and meaning, and the vividly eerie rebirth of a friend through the medium of writing.

FROM PAGE 273: He was quiet a moment longer than she would have been under the circumstances, then took another bite of food. "So Elizabeth was flying to Joshua Tree to buy a juicer?" Her mouth fell open stupidly. He was rarely caustic, and never with her. She felt herself receding from the table like a camera trick, a fast panning-out shot pulling away. ◆

TAKE THE HIGH ROAD

A HARD-DRIVING TRIP TO BILTMORE, AMERICA'S LARGEST PRIVATE RESIDENCE

North Carolina is kind of like New England South. Instead of the Cape, you've got the Outer Banks. Instead of the Patriots, you've got the Panthers. And in lieu of New Hampshire and Vermont, you've got the western part of the state, which includes the Blue Ridge and Great Smoky Mountains, many of which top out above 5,000 feet. That latter area is so idyllic that George Vanderbilt chose it as the site for his country house, a tidy little edifice he named Biltmore. Completed in 1895, Biltmore is still the largest private residence in America. Combine every mansion in Newport into one house and you begin to get an idea of the scale of it.

The house's size isn't measured in square feet; it's measured in acres (more than four). There are 35 bedrooms and 43 bathrooms. The grounds were designed by Frederick Law Olmsted, and the driveway is so long it includes a "holy crap" corner—that corner where suddenly the house is revealed. And this time of year that dramatic reveal is magnificent indeed, because the Biltmore knows how to do Christmas. You can certainly get creative with your tree when you've got 70-foot ceilings in the banquet hall.

The Biltmore's Candlelight Christmas Evenings tours run through Jan. 4 and allow you to experience Christmas through the eyes of a Gilded Age captain of industry. There are ballerinas, choirs, miles of garland and thousands of lights—just like you might do it yourself if you owned all the railroads. Then there's the house itself, which includes an underground room with a heated swimming pool and possibly the coolest man cave yet constructed. A candlelight tour of the Biltmore will fill you with both Christmas spirit and envy for Anderson Cooper's ancestors (they might not tell you on the tour, but he's part of the clan).

For entertainment, there's the spa at the inn on the property. There's nearby Asheville and its funky attractions. And there's the Land Rover Experience Driving School, where you get to see what a $90,000 SUV will do out on the trails. It's the kind of thing George Vanderbilt would've loved, if there'd been Land Rovers in the 19th century.

The driving school's offerings range from a one-hour drive for $250 per car (and up to three people) to an all-day affair for $1,200. In any case, you're talking $100 to $400 per head to do things with Land Rovers that will surely depreciate them much more than that. Such as driving through deep water. Land Rovers are designed to handle serious water crossings, but it'll still feel inadvisable when the instructor encourages you to plunge into the drink and you see the water rising up near the door handles. This is the kind of endeavor that you likely wouldn't attempt without some professional encouragement, and somebody else's car.

The water crossings, like the other obstacles (hills, logs) are calibrated to test the car and your driving skills without actually breaking anything or causing you to slide backward into a tree. It's not the sanitized off-road course at a dealership parking lot, but you've got to remember that they need these vehicles back in one piece at the end of the day.

So if you're envisioning a Camel Trophy trek, winching your way up over the side of a cliff, that's not really the point. It's more like taking an invigorating hike through beautiful terrain, except that, instead of walking, you're gliding through the forest ensconced in your most comfortable leather club chair. That said, the difficulty factor varies with the weather, and if it's been raining (or even snowing), the easy climbs become slick, muddy challenges.

The North Carolina mountains have much to recommend them all year round, but some of the attractions (skiing, rafting, hiking) mirror the ones available on a New England day trip. The Biltmore, though, is something else, and the combination of posh off-roading and over-the-top megamansion Christmas festivities makes for a unique weekend. But get your tickets fast: More than a century after George Vanderbilt threw his first Christmas bash, a lot of people are still lining up for the party. ◆

DOWN BEAT

SUBTERRANEAN JAZZ AND FUNKY FARE IN HARVARD SQUARE

BEAT HOTEL
13 Brattle St., Cambridge
(617-499-0001)

TWENTY YEARS AGO, IN THE EARNEST coffeehouse era, a hippie-themed restaurant and music venue might have seemed entirely campy. Neon peace signs? Pilaf- and tahini-filled Earth Bowls and "bohemian platters" for $20 and up? Thoughtfully mismatched lighting and murals that weren't painted in exchange for beer? So inauthentic.

But tie-dye and fringe are a happy novelty now (hello, Mad Men season six). And somehow Beat Hotel, a brasserie and jazz bar that opened in Harvard Square's former Tannery space in September, makes counterculture feel cool again. Its flower-child decor—peace signs, beaded lights and fabric-draped stage—is over the top, for sure, and Beat Hotel feels less like a careful re-creation of the Beat poets' enclaves of the '50s and '60s and more like a hippie-themed iteration of its sister restaurant and jazz bar, the Beehive in the South End.

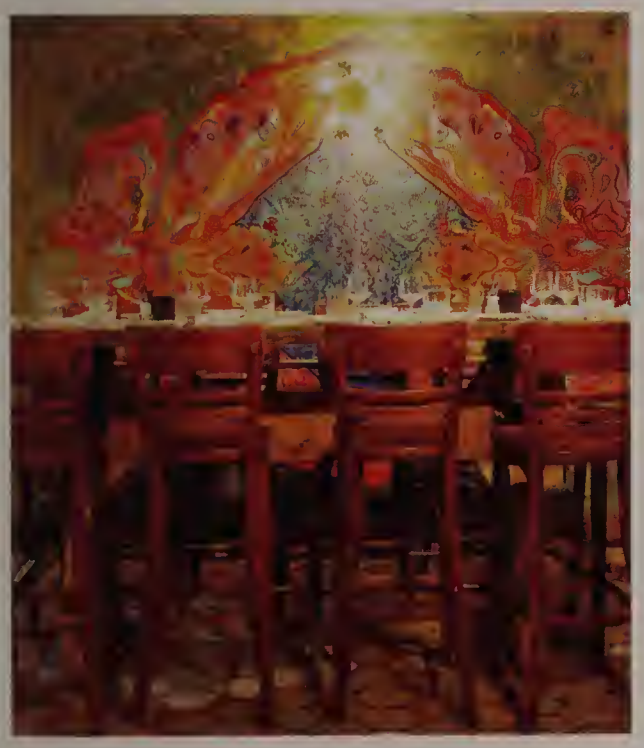
That's not a bad thing—the Beehive, while never a culinary mecca, has filled a niche with artsy decor, live music and a good mix of patrons. Sharing much of the same DNA, Beat Hotel has the potential to be a similarly essential hangout in Harvard Square. Two long bars boast ample seating, and the nightly music is an ambient accompaniment to dinner.

Speaking of which, hippies didn't eat fare like this. Executive chef Rebecca Newell's menu is enormous, ranging from shareable platters ($22) to a raw bar to a burger ($15) to signature entrees. There are also steaks and chops ($19-$39) and seafood ($24-$34); those can be ordered with French brasserie-style sides (fries, simple veggies), steakhouse-style sides (mashed potatoes, mixed peas) or earthy-crunchy sides (quinoa, curried apple).

"Make everyone happy" seems to be the mantra, but perhaps reining it in would yield more success. A calamari appetizer ($12) was greasy and salty—but not nearly as salty as the hamachi sashimi with avocado cream and black olives ($14), which featured fibrous fish. A bland bowl of curried pumpkin and lobster bisque ($11) was full of lobster shells; we'd have sent it back immediately if the server ever checked in before the entrees arrived.

A plate of pulled-lamb nachos ($12) with super-tender spiced lamb and a chili- and cilantro-spiked apple salsa was a fantastic surprise, despite a few errant pieces of bone in the lamb. Clearly, a little more care in the meat-prep department would go a long way. Do order the smoky chipotle barbecue spare ribs ($14), as well. You won't get much chipotle flavor, but the sweet, falling-apart ribs are satisfying.

Thankfully, entrees are more consistent. Tandoori spiced halibut, served with curried red lentils and cucumber raita, has an excellent spiced crust, and the portion is generous. (At $34, it should be.) An enormous heritage rack of pork ($26) features a mild apple-and-bacon stuffing, but the tangy braised red cabbage and cider jus add much-needed acidity to the plate.



Don't miss the seared duck breast ($26), with well-rendered skin and a perfectly cooked pink center. It's sliced, bathed in a sweet cherry sauce and served with greens and savory corn pudding. Veggie lovers will be pleased with the Inca Bowl ($24), a composed plate of quinoa, spicy beans, greens, chewy hominy and lime. We opted to add blackened shrimp, a few of which hadn't been fully deveined, but it can also be ordered vegan ($20).

Given the menu's breadth, it's great to see a large by-the-glass wine selection, with 24 wines on tap. Diners can order a taste, a full glass or a carafe. Cocktails are a mixed bag: The Soursop Fresca ($11.50) is an easy-drinking, citrusy pour, and the list called Dad's Liquor Cabinet features well-shaken takes on classics like the Harvey Wallbanger. But a server strongly advised against quirkier picks like the Rum Cha Yen ($11), with tea-infused rum and condensed milk. Why offer something no one likes?

Then again, not all the servers offered great guidance. One night, our server was thoughtful and attentive, though it was hard not to roll eyes at her promise to "guide you through your experience here," as though we were about to embark on a maiden acid voyage. Other visits, the waitstaff vacillated between distraction and chattiness, either missing cues to clear tables or making far too much small talk. Luckily, there's jazz to fill the gaps, and plenty of people-watching, too. Beat Hotel is a strange trip, and where your meal may falter, there's music and ambiance to keep up the buzz. ◆

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

→ The annual Ellis Boston Antiques Show opened with a gala preview party at the Cyclorama at the Boston Center for the Arts on Oct. 24. The evening benefited Boston's first settlement house, Ellis Memorial, which has cared for the needy since 1885 and recently opened its new Early Education Center. While the weekend-long show featured 40 dealers and galleries, the opening party drew more than 300 guests and raised more than $100,000.

→ The Joey Fund hosted its 29th annual film premiere on Nov. 10. The evening began with a party at the Natick Mall catered by a dozen Boston-area restaurants. More than 1,000 guests then moved on to the nearby AMC Theatre for a preview screening of The Book Thief. Founded by Katherine and Joseph O'Donnell in memory of their late son, the organization raises money for the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and brought in $860,000 that evening.

Q: MY SKIN IS SO DRY RIGHT NOW, IS THERE ANYTHING I SHOULD DO BESIDES SLATHERING ON MOISTURIZER?

A: In the winter our skin needs more hydration than usual and becomes dried out from the wind and weather, as well as low humidity due to indoor heating. Moisturizers are only part of the solution.

When our skin is dry there is usually a layer of dead skin cells that need to be gently exfoliated. If moisturizers are applied to non-exfoliated skin they will simply lay on top of the dead skin and will not be able to penetrate to provide hydration.

Integrating a high-quality glycolic acid product into your skin care regimen will provide the exfoliation you need to dissolve the dead skin cells, as would a gentle chemical peel or other exfoliation treatment with your skin care professional.

The next step is to hydrate your skin by using moisturizing products that contain pure and soothing ingredients such as hyaluronic acid, squalane and green tea. Lastly, the application of lipids can help to provide a barrier to the elements to help seal in and retain moisture.

Come see us at SkinHealth and we would be happy to recommend the best products for your particular skin!

INSIDE LLEWYN DAVIS ★★★★
Starring Oscar Isaac, Carey Mulligan, Justin Timberlake, Adam Driver, Garrett Hedlund and John Goodman. Written and directed by Joel and Ethan Coen. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs

Movies / Sean Burns

STRIKE A CHORD

THE COEN BROTHERS' LATEST FILM, INSIDE LLEWYN DAVIS, IS MORE THAN JUST FOLK MUSIC.

MOVIES LIKE TO TELL US THAT IF you're talented and work hard enough, success will come naturally. It's practically a birthright in the Hollywood scheme of things. But don't say that around Joel and Ethan Coen, who have spent 16 films dedicating their wondrous and amazing career to chronicling failures of all kinds.

These two guys are hung up on the Book of Job as a laugh riot, and their filmography is a catalog of beautiful losers. Whether it's Nicolas Cage's whimsical ex-con H.I. McDunnough in Raising Arizona or Jeff Bridges' gonzo wannabe detective in The Big Lebowski, the Coens love to make films about hapless sad-sacks who never quite rise to the occasion. There's always a cosmically indifferent universe piling heaps of garbage upon these folks, and in my younger days I considered their M.O. to be somewhat cruel and sadistic. But as I got older and more kicked around by life, I've grown to realize that the Coens were just making documentaries.

Inside Llewyn Davis is my favorite movie in years. It's the Coens' most melancholic reverie, ditching their usual clockwork plotting for a loosey-goosey collection of anecdotes that only reveal themselves to be impeccably structured in retrospect. Something is disclosed during the second hour that throws the entire first half of the film into sharp relief, but I'm not going to spoil it here. Like all of the Coen brothers' movies, this one demands and rewards repeat viewings.

Llewyn Davis is a folk singer skirting around the edges of the Greenwich Village scene in 1961. Living hand-to-mouth without even a winter coat, he's a desperate, serious man. Oscar Isaac has been playing ethnic cannon fodder for some time now (you might remember him as Carey Mulligan's doomed husband in Drive), but he's never had a role like this one. Sharp, acerbic and more than a little bit of a dick, Llewyn is couch-surfing across Washington Square pompously asserting his folk-singer superiority (Isaac strums a bunch from the Dave Van Ronk playbook, quite wonderfully).

I can't even begin to extol the cinematic virtues of a marmalade cat accompanying Llewyn on his misadventures.

He's been sleeping with his best friend's wife (Carey Mulligan, again), and even though she spends most of her time hurling profane invectives at Llewyn, it's gorgeously obvious from Mulligan's performance that she's crazy in love with him and hates herself for it. Her beau (a flawlessly moronic Justin Timberlake) enlists Llewyn for some session work on a crummy novelty tune that will be stuck in your head for weeks after seeing this picture, so of course our self-defeating hero signs away the royalties in exchange for some quick cash to pay for an abortion.

Llewyn is always his own worst enemy, fraught with anxiety and perpetually at the end of his rope. He's not an easy character to warm up to, until he starts singing. Isaac aches up on the stage. You'll feel like these songs are being played because they needed to be sung. Performing old staples like "Hang Me, Oh Hang Me" and "Dink's Song," Llewyn's got soul. But is that enough?

A purgatorial road-trip interlude to Chicago intervenes, accompanied by John Goodman's blisteringly obscene jazzman shouting even more outrageous profanity at Llewyn. There's a great Hail Mary pass moment that would be a triumph in any other picture, but thanks to the Coens it leaks out like a depressing wet fart.

Bruno Delbonnel's cinematography conjures up the harshness of New York winters—watching this movie makes you want to put on your coat. The Coens go to town with the geometric insanity of Greenwich Village apartment hallways, and the exteriors all look like a slushy, frozen-over version of the cover of The Freewheelin' Bob Dylan. Plus, I can't even begin to extol the cinematic virtues of a marmalade cat accompanying Llewyn on his misadventures, regarding him with the same indifference as the gods.

The truth is that you can work hard and be really good at what you do, and that still doesn't matter if you can't catch a break. This is a movie for acerbic also-rans shat upon by life—a salute to all the people who never made it. The picture bends itself into a Möbius strip of back-alley beatdowns, until a certain singer-songwriter from Hibbing, Minn., comes crash-landing into Llewyn's scene and destroys the entire movie.

Inside Llewyn Davis is so bleak, you might feel bad about yourself because you won't be able stop howling at just how goddamn funny it is. But that's always been the Coens' style, pitching viewers into an existential abyss and daring them to laugh at the comic absurdity of it all. We're all Llewyn Davis, and we laugh so that we don't cry. ◆

MY ALBUM AND SONG PICKS FROM A LARGELY RETRO YEAR.

DAFT PUNK, Random Access Memories (Columbia). This slinky, playful homage to '70s/'80s disco-rock exceeds summer hit "Get Lucky." Reborn after an eight-year break, the French electronic duo molds live instrumentation and practitioners past and present—from the square Paul Williams to the soulful Pharrell Williams—into infectious grooves.

LUCIUS, Wildewoman (Mom + Pop). Simpatico co-singers Jess Wolfe and Holly Laessig find fellow Berklee brethren in Brooklyn and fashion a wall of sound with girl-group allure, fuzz-rock sonics and tribal percussion.

RUDRESH MAHANTHAPPA, Gamak (Act Music & Vision). This alto-sax upstart's cross-cultural jazz quartet reflects prog-rock, bebop, math-metal and both Indian and Western classical music in sharp, slippery workouts accented by Dave Fiuczynski's microtonal guitar fire.

DAVID BOWIE, The Next Day (Columbia). Evidenced by the sudden appearance of his first album in a decade, rock's senior chameleon gathered no rust in his presumed retirement. Steered by his longtime producer Tony Visconti, Bowie sounds refreshed, urgent and darkly pertinent on his best outing since 1997's underrated Earthling.

FOXYGEN, We Are the 21st Century Ambassadors of Peace & Magic (Jagjaguwar). A hippie-dippy kaleidoscope of '60s-pop references from young musicians who transcend mimicry with artful assimilation in the studio. Every sound and feeling floats into place with a wink and a nod.

MOE POPE + RAIN, Let the Right Ones In (Brick). While narcissistic Kanye West pushed his brilliant/banal extremes with Yeezus, rapper Pope and producer Rain dropped a local hip-hop opus worthy of wider notice. Street-savvy imagery rattles edgy sound poems riddled with breakbeats, while genre-jumping cameos from Julia Easterlin, Bad Rabbits' Dua Boakye and Lady Lamb the Beekeeper add to the ultimately positive flow.

KURT VILE, Wakin on a Pretty Daze (Matador). There's something relaxed and modestly resonant to this Philly native's latest. With laconic guitar jams that glide instead of meander, dazed but not confused, it imparts simple, self-aware thoughts like early-morning moments on his pillow.

DELLA MAE, This World Oft Can Be (Rounder). Raised on Boston's string-band scene, this all-female acoustic quintet boasts assured pickers, singers and writers. They found earthy resonance in Johnny Cash's old studio with bluegrass veteran Bryan Sutton while touching on country, pop and Americana territory, and it's paid off with a Grammy nomination.

JAKE BUGG, Jake Bugg (Island). Before dashing off a more contemporary follow-up with producer Rick Rubin, this English teenager dropped a mature debut that surprised both with its folkie sensitivity and its love for early rock 'n' roll. Sure, he drafted some co-writers and echoed Bob Dylan and others, but young Bugg has a spark that can't be denied.

SAVAGES, Silence Yourself (Matador). While short of the clarity and ferocity of the band's live sets, this debut still packs a dark, visceral punch that echoes Siouxsie Sioux, Joy Division and early U2. Jehnny Beth's laser-like howls about sex and violence, Gemma Thompson's guitar shards and the taut rhythms of Ayse Hassan and Fay Milton forge a brutal dance.

2013 SONGS OF THE YEAR

Daft Punk, "Get Lucky." Definitive earworm stoked by Nile Rodgers' chic rhythm guitar. Kanye West, "Black Skinhead." Hip-hop visionary gets his scream on with this primal, anti-racist stomp. Jake Bugg, "Two Fingers." Even more charming than "Lightning Bolt." Arcade Fire, "Reflektor." Erecting a widescreen dance-rock monolith. Jason Isbell, "Elephant." The difficult dance around the most painful subject. Neko Case, "Man." A gallop across animal and gender identities. The National, "Graceless." Locomotion through haunting loss. Lorde, "Royals." Coronation for outsiders. Okkervil River, "Down Down the Deep River." A romp down Will Sheff's childhood memories, and perhaps our own. James Blake, "Retrograde." Lonely, lovely hymn to self. ◆

ELF ENVY

INVENTING A PHENOMENON IS CHILD'S PLAY.

SPY GAME: Sleigh on the Bay sounds like a perfect game to manipulate your kids.

I ACCEPT THAT CHRISTMAS IS A COMMERCIAL event and that the holidays bring a deluge of solicitations to buy lots of things. I'm fine with that, and in fact I enjoy perusing the Patagonia catalog to see which jackets are hot among dilettante organic parsley farmers and semiprofessional crevasse climbers. But this year, my capacity for holiday cheer was severely tested when I opened a Bed Bath & Beyond catalog and discovered An Elf's Story travel mug for $14.99.

An Elf's Story is a feature-length Elf on the Shelf infomercial disguised as a movie. So the $15 mug advertises a movie that was produced to advertise a product—a product that makes me sickeningly jealous that I didn't think of it first.

I don't begrudge rich people who invented something that I couldn't invent. Like Steve Jobs: I'll pour some out for you, man, because I sure couldn't create an iPhone. If it were up to me, we'd communicate by throwing rocks at each other. (One rock: yes. Two rocks: I'll order the cabernet, please. And so on.) But the Elf on the Shelf... I could've come up with that. But I didn't, and the mother-daughter team that did now spends Christmas aboard their 200-foot yacht, Shelf Life. (The ship's tender is called Taking an Elfie. The dingy is called Elf Esteem. I know, they're so new-money.)

For the uninitiated, the narrative behind the Elf on the Shelf is that he reports your kids' doings to Santa, coercing good behavior through the threat of omnipresent surveillance, sort of like a jolly little NSA wiretap. And I'm sure many people enjoy manipulating their children via a demented supernatural imp, but every time I look at the thing, I start thinking, "How can I rip this off? I've got it: the Sleigh on the Bay. Reindeer on a Maine Pier. Santa on a Can o'Fanta." I'm just spitballing.

Making me more indignant, the actual elf stinks. His hands are sewn together, so all you can do is place him on a flat surface or hang him on a hook. Hey, ever hear of Velcro-brand hook-and-loop fasteners, people? Well, the lawyers for Velcro-brand hook-and-loop fasteners sure have, and they should be pleased to see that I got their letter and no longer refer to their product in a generic manner. In fact, they scared me so much that I cried my way through a box of Kleenex-brand Cool Touch Facial Tissues while riding my Jet Ski-brand personal watercraft. It was quite a sight, out there on the water!

Anyway, the Elf on the Shelf got me thinking about how I could make a quick buck or million. For instance, I'm considering licensing a board game called Eight Things You Don't Know About Me: The Facebook Game That Was Popular for a Few Days. I loved that game. I'd say the first thing people don't know about me is that I was born a hermaphrodite. The second thing is that I think "hermaphrodite" means "cute baby." Hey, this nursery is crawling with hermaphrodites! Literally.

Say, people buy books as gifts, and I've always wanted to become a ghostwriter, so how about a holiday pick-me-up from everybody's favorite mustachioed quasi-therapist? Don't Beat Your Elf Up: Christmas Wisdom from Dr. Phil will be a huge hit for his new co-writer, Johnny Panama. So does anybody know how to get a meeting with Dr. Phil? I mean, other than by being an emotionally crippled shell of a human being with a perverse longing for studio-audience disapproval?

Obviously, I've got some great ideas. But I don't know how to translate them into, you know, being rich and owning numerous Jet Ski-brand personal watercraft. So I talked to fellow Mainer Todd Greene, who invented the HeadBlade, a device that helps guys shave their heads. It seems like it must be pretty easy to just come up with a product and sell a ton of them, right?

"When I first invented HeadBlade, I got a booth in Venice Beach and brought 500 HeadBlades," Greene says. "We sold eight all day. And at that point I'd put $150,000 and nine months of my life into it. Eventually I realized that people go to Venice Beach to buy weed, pizza and sunglasses, not something that would be in the Museum of Modern Art." That's certainly discouraging, although Venice Beach does sound like a lot of fun.

Greene stuck with it and eventually found his audience; now you can buy HeadBlades in Rite Aid and Walgreens and other places where fine cranial depilatory products are sold. But frankly, the process to reach that point sounds like it involves willpower and perseverance and other admirable character traits that I don't really possess.

In my case, I think assimilation trumps innovation. If An Elf's Story 2 needs a quick rewrite, Johnny Panama's ready to go. ◆

SANTA'S LITTLE HELPER: Elf on the Shelf

SOROFF ON

MAYOR MENINO

After five terms and 20 years, Boston's longest-serving mayor is leaving the political arena. We talked to him about legacies, elocution and, of course, city parking.

JONATHAN SOROFF

Photographed By KERRY BRETT

The longest-serving mayor in Boston history, Thomas M. Menino will turn 71 on Dec. 27 and end his record-breaking tenure a couple of weeks later. A lifelong resident of Hyde Park, he graduated from UMass Boston with a degree in community planning while serving as a city councilor. In March of 1993, President Clinton named Menino's predecessor, Ray Flynn, U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, and Menino took office as acting mayor until he was elected that November. Nicknamed "Mumbles" by the media for his Boston accent, he's also been called the "Urban Mechanic." Characterized by a focus on education and child welfare, his tenure has created vibrant neighborhoods, economic opportunity across ethnic and social lines, increased accessibility to health care, environmental initiatives and social progress. He and his wife, Angela, live in the Readville section of Hyde Park and dote on their two children and six grandchildren.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What do you most want to be remembered for as mayor? Two things. Both are intangible. One is how the city works much better today than it did when I came into office. We had a huge problem from 1973 on. We were a racially divided city. We're much better today—not perfect, but everyone gets along much better, and we don't have the nonsense we used to. I'm very proud of that. The other piece is education and our children. We've made a lot of gains. Again, not perfect, but we're much better. When I became mayor, the schools were vastly underenrolled. Now they're overenrolled. I once had to go to a job fair in Florida to recruit teachers. We went to Panama for math teachers. This year, we had 3,000 applicants for 300 jobs. So it's a city where people want to raise their children again.

But there's room for improvement? Of course. Until every child has the opportunity for a college education if they want it. There's always room for improvement. But you have to consider: We take in every kid who walks through our door. The kids who can't speak English, the severely handicapped, everyone. That's our responsibility.

Thing you're most proud of? The human factor. How we've helped people. If we're doing that, we're doing our job.

Best part of the job? Being in the neighborhoods. Talking to people. Learning from them. As mayor, you're sometimes isolated. You're in this office, with these big walls. I enjoyed being out listening to criticisms, ideas.

Describe Boston. We're both a big city and a small city. We take a lot of things personally. We get to know each other and get involved in each other's lives. And at the same time, we have an outsized influence in the world.

Most odious part of the job? Oh, easy. The media.

You realize I'm going to transcribe this and sometimes it's hard to understand what you're saying. [Laughs] There really isn't anything odious about it.

What about all the events? Nah! I love that! I used to do 14 events in a day...

That's because you didn't have to park your car. I relished that! It got my energy up. Once again, it's people. I guess the only thing I haven't liked were people who tried to use me or the administration for selfish ends. That drives me right up a wall, and I can see right through it. I can see it now, as I'm about to leave office, people trying to use me to do certain things that I will not allow them to do. Just because I'm leaving. I'm the same guy today that I was when I took office.

Biggest thing you think they'll name after you? I don't want anything named after me. It's not about me. It's about the people of the city.

"The human factor. How we've helped people. If we're doing that, we're doing our job."

You've got a better record than many mayors when it comes to the arts, which is a word I love to hear you say. The ahhhhts [exaggerating his accent]. They're a major part of the city, and I've loved helping some of those groups out, but I'm not just talking about arts organizations. The artists, too. I remember when the Piano Factory residents were going to be evicted. I was down there. I remember the days when all the artists lived in Fort Point Channel illegally. We winked and blinked at 'em. Now they're million-dollar apartments. We have to have places in the city where artists can live and work.

Three most pressing things the new mayor has to deal with? Well, we have to continue the progress we're making in the Boston Public Schools. The finances of the city are obviously very important, because when the finances work, the city works. You can't borrow Peter to pay Paul. You can't use one-time revenue to plug holes, because the next year, what are you going to do? And jobs. Helping people to create job opportunities. You've got to give the people hope and opportunity.

Anything you feel you've left undone? One of the things I don't think I've done a good job of is moving traffic in this city. It drives me up the wall. There are a lot of different reasons why what we've tried hasn't worked, but good luck to the new mayor. Boston's an old city. It's not laid out neatly. It's surrounded by water. It's very difficult to get traffic moving.

How about affordable parking? Parking is good, and it's a curse, also. In the small business districts, you hear from the business owners, "We have no pahhkin'..."

Another word I love to hear you say. [Laughs] They complain about it. Then I ask, "Where do you park?" And they say, "Oh, in front of my store." I'm thinking, "You're taking up that parking space for eight or 10 hours a day? Find someplace else!" So you have to educate people about how to improve the situation.

It's a nightmare trying to park without taking out a second mortgage. Is it expensive some places? Sure! I see parking for $50. It's expensive. So how do you deal with that? Park someplace less convenient. Use public transportation. There are limits to what can be done. You can't mess with the architectural integrity of the city. Boston is the most European-looking of American cities, and that's important. We're not all high-rises with five levels of underground parking, and I've stopped some buildings for that reason. The great architecture we have can't be replaced. I call them "pickets to heaven," cause they're all the same. Straight up, with nothing around them. You can't lose places like Post Office Square, the North End, Beacon Hill, Charlestown, Roxbury... you can't allow that to deteriorate for parking or any other reason, or we end up looking like any other city in America.

Ever take offense at the nickname "Mumbles"? No. I'm me. I'm not anything special. People have tried to coach me on delivery, but I'm just me. It's one of my strongest traits.

Favorite dignitary to entertain? President Clinton was fun to be with. I'll tell you a funny story about him. He and Ted Kennedy were here announcing a crime bill, and Clinton goes, "We'll get something to eat. My staff'll take care of it." So I ask his staff where we're going, and they say to a hotel. I said, "I'm not going with you unless we go to a neighborhood place." "Oh, no, we can't. It's the president of the United States." So I said, "I'm not going with you." So they ask the president, and he says, "Whatever the mayor wants, we're gonna do." So we ended up at Mike's City Diner in the South End. It's Teddy, me, the president and some of his staff. Afterward, the bill comes. Teddy has no money. Clinton has no money. Old me pays the bill, because they don't carry money. So the following week, I'm going to breakfast at Charlie's Sandwich Shoppe in the South End with Al Gore. I said, "Before we go in, do you have any money?" He asked why. I said, "Last week, your partner stiffed me."

Who did you enjoy meeting as mayor? [Dimitris] Avramopoulos, the mayor of Athens, Greece. He's good guy. We got along well. Now he's defense minister. I keep in touch.

Are you going to miss City Hall? Oh, yeah...

I mean the building itself. Oh, no! This is the ugliest building in the city. The Financial Times called it the ugliest building in America, or maybe even the world. I won't miss the building. I'll miss the people.

So is Mrs. Menino happy that it's over? No. Because she thinks I'll be home all the time. But Angela will be somewhat happy because she doesn't love the spotlight. She did say to me, "You have to be out of the house at 9 o'clock. You've gotta go someplace. I don't care where, but you can't hang around the house."

Favorite landmark to take an out-of-towner to on their first visit to Boston? A good Italian restaurant. I can't name names. Besides that, I'd take them for a walk, because this is the ultimate walking city. We have something no other city does. It was created first by the settlers and only later by city planners. It's authentic and human-scaled. And we haven't allowed our developers to tear down a lot of it. Some, yes, but most of it's still authentic.

The media has depicted you as a grudge-holder. Is that fair? I don't hold grudges. The people who say I hold grudges are the ones who do. If I did, I wouldn't talk to anybody. Just because I tell you how I feel doesn't mean I dislike you. I'm trying to be honest.

Biggest crisis of your administration? 9/11, obviously, but there've been lots of others. The Marathon bombing. When the Rev. Williams died because we raided the wrong apartment. The important thing is how we recover. This is a very strong city.

Single most important quality in a politician? I'll give you three: Being a good listener. Accepting criticism. Being a good learner. I've been here 20 years. I learned something different every day.

If you could needlepoint a pillow for the next mayor, what would it say? You don't know everything.

Tips on staffing? Not your political friends. Outside folks, who will give a new fresh approach to what's going on.

Where do you think Boston will be in 100 years? Well, we've got to watch out for the rising sea level. We're already dealing with some of that stuff. The new Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital over in Charlestown put all their mechanicals on the roof in case of flood or high water. That's a biggie.

If I'd told you 40 years ago that you'd be the city's longest-serving mayor, what would you have said? When I first got elected, the newspaper said, "This mayor's not gonna last four years. He can't speak. He's not good-lookin'. He doesn't listen to people." I beat 'em on at least one count. I'm not good lookin'. My articulation of words isn't perfect. But I do listen to people.

Did you ever consider running for higher office, like governor? Not after I became mayor. Why would I want to be governor? Even if there was the possibility of becoming a U.S. senator, you're talking about a six-year term, locked away in Washington. Being mayor is the best job in the world. Most of those guys never get to talk to their constituents. I used to go to four coffee shops a day, and I don't drink coffee. It was just to hear what people had to say.

Is that what's shaped your political beliefs? Absolutely. I got my education on gay marriage from a friend I used to walk with. He's a real Archie Bunker type. One morning, same-sex marriage came up, and I said, "What do you think?" He said, "Why shouldn't two people who love each other be able to get married?" This is a very old-school guy. I live in Hyde Park, traditionally one of the most conservative neighborhoods in the city. I didn't get one iota of grief about my stance on gay marriage. Not one bit.

What about the St. Patrick's Day parade controversy? They told me it was a bad move when I refused to march, but I'm the mayor of all the people. You exclude one, you exclude everyone. So I didn't do it.

Any final words? Yeah. You haven't heard the last from me. ◆

Prominent citizens reflect on the mayor who defined an era.

"I think about all the kids who love books and read with confidence because Mayor Menino made an investment in them. His Read Boston program is just part of a legacy of lifting people up—particularly kids—who can tell that he really cares about them and wants them to succeed."

—LISA HUGHES, CBS NEWS ANCHOR, WBZ TV 4

"Mayor Menino recognized the important role that the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, and all the other great cultural institutions play in the fabric of our city. From renaming Huntington Avenue 'Avenue of the Arts' in 1998 to his participation in the dedication ceremony of the Museum's Art of the Americas Wing in 2010, he has been a friend to the arts. It was important to Tom that all residents of Boston have the opportunity to experience great artistic treasures."

—MALCOLM ROGERS, ANN AND GRAHAM GUND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS

"It's hard to imagine Boston without Tom Menino as mayor. No one loves this city and her people more, or is more excited about her future. Mayor Menino has been a tremendous leader. I thank him for his extraordinary and tireless service to the people of Boston, and look forward to leaning on his wisdom for many more years to come."

—GOVERNOR DEVAL PATRICK

"Mayor Menino is not only OF the people of Boston, but more importantly always FOR the people of Boston."

—STEVE BELKIN, BUSINESSMAN AND PHILANTHROPIST

"From the moment I met Tom Menino, it was clear he was totally devoted to the city and to the charities and people that are trying to make things better. Every conversation I ever had with Tom always revolved around doing good things for other people, never himself."

—WYC GROUSBECK, CO-OWNER, BOSTON CELTICS

"A seemingly improbable choice to become mayor, City Councilor Thomas Menino emerged onto the political stage sweeping into the office by automatic appointment and now 20 years later leaves with the almost unheard of approval rating of 72 percent of Bostonians and thoughts of all; what will the city be like without his leadership?"

—DAVID MUGAR, BUSINESSMAN AND PHILANTHROPIST

"Tommy could be as cuddly as a teddy bear, or as ferocious as a caged angry tiger, depending on the issue and what side of it he was on. That's what makes him great."

TECH'S YOUNG TURKS

How innovation is changing the face of philanthropy.

BY LINDSAY TUCKER

PHOTOGRAPHED BY ADAM DeTOUR

On a balmy Thursday morning in October, nearly 30 teenagers and young 20-somethings sit four to five at a table, dressed in their Sunday best, on the fifth floor of 93 Summer St. in the towering Financial District. These students are part of Year Up, a nonprofit program dedicated to providing professional opportunities to young adults from low-income families who lack access to higher education and a living wage. Among the clusters of wide-eyed learners sit technology entrepreneurs. These volunteers are there to motivate, talk about networking and give resume feedback as part of a citywide initiative by the tech community to help the less fortunate.

At the same time, in another part of town, employees from Vsnap, Promoboxx and Silicon Valley Bank have descended upon Roxbury Community College. They're wearing brightly colored T-shirts as they paint walls and rusty fences, scrub grout, and dig up weeds and dead trees. It's quite the contrast from their typical day-to-day activities in the city's flashy high-rises. For this third-annual day of service, TUGG (Technology Underwriting Greater Good)—a Boston-based crowdsourced-philanthropy network of 10,000 techies dedicated to galvanizing social entrepreneurship—mobilized a thousand of its members to hit the streets at 27 work sites across Greater Boston. To them, monetary giving isn't enough. There's a desire to be involved, get their hands dirty and be more than a signature at the bottom of a check.

Boston's tech community is just a small part of a greater national trend, which has been slowly swelling over the past decade. Young entrepreneurial wealth, combined with mass access to new philanthropic vehicles through social media and the Internet, has prompted a surge in involvement from a new breed of untypically youthful givers. (According to The Chronicle of Philanthropy, of the five biggest philanthropic gestures of 2012, three came from couples under the age of 40.) Kickstarter, PayPal, fundraise.com or even something as simple as a hashtag make it nearly effortless for anybody with an Internet connection to be part of something big. "Anyone who earns a reasonable living can be a philanthropist. The entry point... has come down substantially over the last few years," Marguerite Griffin, director of philanthropic services at U.S. wealth manager Northern Trust, told The Wall Street Journal in 2010.

In 2006, TUGG emerged to harness that notion, and to put a little democracy back into charity. For its members, gone are the days of attending one black-tie gala a year and scribbling out a single check at the end of the evening. Instead, cutting-edge startups and venture-capital firms are looking for more meaningful ways to support the people and organizations who need it most—and they're doing so more frequently. "This is a younger generation that's used to being empowered," says TUGG co-founder Jeff Fagnan. "When we started TUGG, we'd realized from working in the tech ecosystem that there were people in startups in their late 20s and early 30s who wanted to get involved in nonprofit initiatives but didn't want to do it in a traditional way. They didn't wanna go to their parents' rubber-chicken parties."

In creating TUGG, Fagnan used a philanthropic model that he and executive director David Brown say was greatly inspired by Obama's 2008 grassroots presidential campaign. "There was this idea of crowd-sourced philanthropy, and that money doesn't buy you anything," Fagnan says. "At TUGG, we care much more about your engagement and you being a part of this community than the amount of checks you can write." Brown concurs. Traditionally, he says, your boss or employer decided what organizations were worth supporting, and you just showed up in your suit and tie and played along. But TUGG is not just allowing its members a say in where money goes, but empowering them to take it a step further. "We encourage folks to take leadership positions from an early age, and actually help support and grow these organizations they're interested in helping," Brown says. They're looking at real-world problems in the community and asking, "How can we fix this?"

In this regard, 80 to 90 percent of TUGG-supported initiatives start as proposals submitted via the web. "Anybody in the tech community can send us a referral and say, 'I think this nonprofit is super interesting, and here's why,' and it will be considered," Fagnan says. Once every few months, a selection committee votes to determine which six or seven will be showcased at the next event. On the night of the affair, hundreds of attendees from Boston's tech community receive two poker chips and free rein to work the room, chatting with folks from nonprofit or social-innovation groups. When the festivities wind down, party-goers use their chips to vote for the initiatives they'd like to see get backing dollars, and two winners are announced. "It's almost plug-and-play philanthropy," says TUGG member Smith Anderson, relationship manager at Boston's Silicon Valley Bank. "We're able to come together as a group and participate as individuals for the greater good of Boston and the surrounding community."

Dozens of the country's MBA and undergraduate business programs have already recognized, as TUGG has, this inherent shift in the zeitgeist. They're now offering philanthropy studies as either distinct majors or by way of individual courses like Philanthropy and Public Problem-Solving at Harvard's Kennedy School, or Yale's Philanthropic Foundations. And the first free-standing school of philanthropy—where students can earn a bachelor's, master's, or doctorate in the subject—was established at Indiana University in 2012 and graduated its first class in May.

What caused this massive shift? For one, entrepreneurs are problem-solvers by nature and eager to throw that energy into tackling tough social problems, says Maria Cirino, co-founder and managing director of venture-capital firm .406 Ventures. What's more, she says, the millennial generation is more in tune with current social and environmental issues. "They're reflecting a more urgent need to do something different on this planet, and I think younger, smarter people are more aware of that than any of us were 20, 30 years ago," Cirino says. "Climate change, political unrest, the future of the world feels very tentative compared with decades ago."

"You don't go to [business school], get a job on Wall Street, then go to work at a hedge fund and retire at 40 [anymore]," Wharton professor Americus Reed said in the school's business journal in April. Instead, many talented minds are heading for hubs of innovation like Silicon Valley and Boston's Innovation District. It's also no question that much of the technology that these communities put forth is directly responsible for the ease and speed at which donors are able to act. For instance, in April, Fidelity led the launch of a widget that allows clients like the Red Cross and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to initiate grants from donor-advised funds directly through their websites. And with the explosion of social media and smartphones, not only does the public have access to a wealth of information at their fingertips 24/7, but in the event of a tragedy, updates are available in real time. And when disaster strikes, it's that much easier to mobilize for a cause.

"At TUGG, we care much more about your engagement and you being a part of this community than the amount of checks you can write."

— David Brown

TUGG EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

By 3:30 pm on April 15, Phil Beauregard, the 32-year-old CEO of performance-management-software startup Objective Logistics sat in a mostly empty office in Downtown Crossing, glued to his computer screen. He had just sent everyone home after hearing that two bombs had exploded near the finish line of the Boston Marathon. "In the past we would have turned on the news, but I was tracking the whole thing through social media, and so was everyone else," he says.

"A lot of chatter was going on on Twitter among the CEOs, founders and venture capitalists in this great city." Everyone wanted to know how they could help. Just before 4 pm, only an hour after the bombings, Beauregard dialed up the Red Cross to propose a blood drive, an idea that was becoming popular in the conversation on Twitter. But the Red Cross was completely inundated and offered to set up a drive in six months. "I thought to myself, everyone is following this and totally engrossed. How can we turn this grief into something substantial? At that point, it was a little pandemonium." So he put out a tweet: "Ok. Blood drive is postponed. We are setting up a fund."

And then he called TUGG co-founder Jeff Fagnan. "I asked him if there was any way we could get TUGG involved so we could have an established, well-respected vehicle to essentially channel funds through," Beauregard says. Fagnan was happy to oblige, and immediately called the head of one of his investments, fundraise.com, to set up a website for donations. The thing went wild.

"Our initial goal was $20,000," Beauregard says. "We surpassed it in 14 minutes." They upped the goal to $50,000, but within 30 minutes they had reached that, too. "It seemed like it was going to be endless," he says. The money wasn't coming from big companies or Boston's power-players; instead it was pledges of $50, $100 and $500 from individuals—entrepreneurs, venture capitalists and innovators—that made up the bulk sum. When all was said and done, Beauregard says, the tech community garnered more than $320,000 in donations in a week and a half.

"The response was unbelievable," Brown says. "Supporters came in from all 50 states and five different continents. It really was crowd-sourced philanthropy at its best in the sense that we did a very little amount to set it up and the community took full ownership of spreading the word."

"Our initial goal was $20,000. We surpassed it in 14 minutes"

CEO OF OBJECTIVE LOGISTICS

For Fagnan, the true takeaway is adapt or die. The entire nature of not-for-profits, he expects, will be upturned by the tech industry in the coming years. "For them to be able to compete effectively, they're going to have to leverage that technology and social media. Engagement is truly the best recourse we have in society today," he says. "The days of trying to wine and dine big donors for big checks? That day is changing. I'd rather have a thousand people at a smaller denomination level and have their engagement, and I think that's where nonprofits are headed." ◆

THE PATH OF LEASE RESISTANCE

The real-estate crash spawned an unexpected side effect: the Gen Y landlord.

— BY Ezra Dyer —

THE 2008 FINANCIAL CRISIS AND ensuing real-estate crash were disasters unprecedented since the Great Depression. Everybody knows somebody who got laid off, foreclosed upon or otherwise financially burned when the Dow dipped into the 6,000s. But there's another narrative out there, one in which the meltdown opened a window of opportunity for those lucky enough to hold onto their jobs (and properties). Thanks to the peculiar set of circumstances in 2008-'09—low housing prices, low interest rates and strong rental demand—there emerged a heretofore uncommon character on the Boston real-estate scene: the ridiculously young landlord.

In my Boston renting experience, landlords were fearsome ancients who growled surly epithets over the phone when problems arose. In six years of renting, I never actually met any of my landlords. My first landlady lived on the Cape and called a grand total of once, after I appeared on an MTV Cribs-style episode of Channel 5's Chronicle in which I demonstrated the gas grill that I kept on the fire escape (you'd stand in the bathtub and lean out the window to use it). Two minutes after the show concluded, the phone rang and she told me to get rid of the grill or face eviction. So that's what I know about my first landlady: She lived on the Cape and definitely watched Chronicle.

Nowadays, there's a fair chance you might run into your landlord out at a bar in Southie, or on the Green Line en route to work. Because that landlord might be someone like me, who bought a one-bedroom condo in 2004 with the notion that it would always be easy to sell and upgrade when the time came. But a few years later, when marriage and the expectation of offspring dictated larger quarters, the market had slid so far that selling didn't make sense. In 2008, I became reluctant a landlord. I have other friends who followed the accidental-landlord path, as well as some who proactively took advantage of the sluggish market to snag a property. Like me, all of them are finding that the transition from tenant to landlord involves unexpected surprises. Owning a condo or a building sounds like a great idea in theory, but the long-term financial benefits can be obscured by the short-term realization that a dead animal in the ceiling is not the renter's problem. It's yours.

My friend Matt faced that particular situation soon after buying a place in Southie. "Within a week of our first tenants moving in, we kept getting calls about a very 'strange, sweet smell' coming from the second-floor closet," Matt says. "We spent a small fortune hiring mold inspectors, pest-removal guys and chimney inspectors. We painted the closet three times with KILZ and cut holes in the walls. Nothing worked. I finally took a long drywall knife and just started poking holes in the ceiling. Lo and behold, I pulled the knife out covered in long black hairs. Oh, the anticipation. Cutting a wider hole resulted in a stiff black cat falling down on our heads. My wife started throwing up... but the smell was gone and the tenants miraculously stayed." Well, of course they did—their landlord actually came over and took care of the problem, rather than saying, "Don't worry, it'll go away on its own in a couple weeks."

I was also quick to deal with the situation when, a few years into my landlord experience, I was informed that squirrels were partying in the walls. A helpful exterminator pointed out that the squirrels basically had their own personal doorways through the building's rotten ledges. New ledges, new siding and a hefty condo association assessment later, the squirrels were once again banished to the outdoors. And that's the story of the $12,000 squirrels. But other than that, the place has been trouble-free, with the exception of the furnace and furnace wiring and chimney liner and hallway carpet and dishwasher and dryer and garbage disposal, all of which are new. Did you know that you can't have an abandoned oil tank in the basement? I do now! Everything's up to code, and I really need a large scotch.

Fortunately, my friends have plenty of stories to make me feel better. Like my buddy Elliot in New Hampshire, who rents out half of a duplex plus a three-bedroom apartment. While I tend to hire professionals to deal with problems, Elliot approaches apartment infrastructure issues with a Mr. Roper-like DIY ethos—with mixed results. "The other day I tried to install a GFI outlet and somehow shorted out the dishwasher in one of my units," he tells me. "Electricians are on their way today. I also tried to install an obsolete fan into a kitchen hood. The replacement part looked to be close enough to work, but when I turned it on, it started smoking and literally caught on fire. Oh, and last night the fences all blew over in the hurricane-force winds and I lost power until 3 am. Besides that, being a landlord is awesome."

Owning a condo or a building sounds like a great idea in theory, but the long-term financial benefits can be obscured by the short-term realization that a dead animal in the ceiling is not the renter's problem. It's yours.

Besides the buildings themselves, tenants can offer their own challenges. Back when I was a tenant, I fixed everything myself—including legal wrangling when an upstairs contractor blew out our ceiling and covered the apartment in wet drywall and sawdust. Today's renters, to hear it told, have somewhat higher expectations of service. If you want to hear a 35-year-old sound like a curmudgeonly geezer, drop the word "millennials."

Complaints lodged to landlords by their not-much-younger tenants have included "Can you please seal the attic crawl spaces so I don't have to smell the neighbors smoking?" and a request for a new dryer because the current one, while perfectly functional, is "not drying my clothes fast enough." Tim, who describes his building as "an Irish battleship with a pet cemetery yard," informs me it's now apparently a common assumption that light bulbs are included in the rent. Also, expecting roommates to issue one check per month might be wishful thinking. "In two units, there are six girls who issue six different checks every month," Tim says. "They're all in different denominations because they have side agreements or one of them bought drinks at Stats on Saturday, so they all have to take that off their portion of the rent check because that somehow involves me."

Showers seem to be an area that often fails to live up to renters' expectations. Elliot tells me that a tenant called to complain about his shower splashing on the walls when he uses it. "After talking with him, I couldn't get him to explain what he wanted me to do," he says. "His gripe was that the shower area was too small and he doesn't want to have to wipe down the shower when he's done using it. So apparently he was trying to get me to come over and clean his shower for him, or somehow make the bathroom bigger."

One landlord with a place on the North Shore got a little bit belligerent when I raised the topic of tenants and showers. "Oh, it's harder to get hot water upstairs than what you're used to? Shower fing downstairs. Or go make more money so you can afford a place with perfect hot water. That's why there are two showers fheads." Hey, it sounds like somebody's learning to landlord the old-school way—with anger and profanity!

My friend John recalls that when he rented an apartment in the Fenway area, his landlady was a sullen townie who exuded menace. "I asked if they were going to do anything before we moved in," he says, implying that perhaps a paint job or cleaning was in order. "With her mean-ass, chain-smoking voice, she was just like 'Whaddaya mean? Like what?' as if I was a moron for even asking." Now that he's on the landlord side of the equation, he suspects that he needs to adopt a bit of that standoffishness to avoid getting taken advantage of by tenants. "I just need the life sob stories to stop and the check-writing to start," he says. "I think I haven't learned to be enough of a prick yet."

I'd argue that young landlords, as opposed to the older ones calloused by decades of leaky faucet complaints, are likely more attentive to the needs of tenants. The narrow age delta between owner and renter might even result in the heretofore unheard of landlord-tenant party. "I've played beer pong with my tenants," Matt says. "Thus participating in the ruin of my own hardwood floors." He's also run into tenants at Southie bars, where he's been cornered and quizzed about his cash flows.

Despite the challenges, most of the landlords that I know have emerged thus far with a positive outlook. A friend of mine named Aaron with a place in Jamaica Plain hasn't even dealt with so much as a clogged drain. "We have a management company to deal with the crazies, but—knock on wood—we've had it pretty smooth," he says. John, when I first brought up the topic several years ago, flatly declared, "I hate landlording." Now, he says, "Overall I've been satisfied, even with the bumps along the way." In a measure of how much his perspective has changed, John optimistically points out that in Boston at least you don't have to worry about meth-heads stealing your copper pipes. Hey there, Mr. Glass-Half-Full!

"There is some good among all the bad news," Matt says. "In this era of no raises, it's nice to have some positive cash flow. So I guess we'll enjoy the near-term upside while we wait for the phone to ring about the roof blowing off or the deck caving in." Tim, after hearing other landlord stories and pondering his own, says, "I'm listing this thing on Saturday. Thanks for the nudge." He's kidding. But if he weren't, I think I'd understand. ◆

METRO BOSTON'S REVEALING GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND CHAMPAGNE TOASTS

AGENDA for 12/18–1/7

Buzz Worthy

Naughty New Year's

AS MOTIVATION FOR your 2014 resolution to shed a few pounds, why not watch some sexy ladies shed a few clothes? At the Beehive's seventh annual Discothèque Burlesque New Year's Eve party, "The Sexation" Calamity Chang, Lil' Steph and Stormy Leather will steam up the jazz joint with burlesque moves straight out of Paris. Funk and soul beats from the AB's and vocalist Sinclair Jennings will set the tone for indulging in craft cocktails as well as hors d'oeuvres and desserts by executive chef Marc Orfaly—good thing your diet starts the next day. And after working off the buffet dinner while dancing, you can quench your thirst with a glass or two of Champagne. Follow the buzz to the Beehive and groove your way to a better 2014. / Jemma Douglas

SECRET SANTA

It's a natural part of growing up to feel leery of Mr. Claus. Eight-year-old Susan Walker is certainly skeptical in Miracle on 34th Street, a stage adaptation of the classic Christmas film. Susan asks the real Kris Kringle, who's serving as the Macy's Santa, to prove his identity by getting her a house for her family. When some people insist that Kris is insane, he's put on trial. The 19-member cast captures the season's spirit and makes the audience reconnect with its own innocence—and Mr. Kringle's, too—through Dec. 29 at the Stoneham Theatre. Daniel Petersen

SANTA CLAWS

Halloween and Christmas usually happen once a year, but not in Halloween Town. This year marks the 20th anniversary of Tim Burton's The Nightmare Before Christmas, a musical stop-motion classic combining the two beloved holidays. The Pumpkin King, Jack Skellington, is used to celebrating Halloween year-round, but yearns for candy canes and mistletoe after discovering Christmas Town while roaming the forest. Skellington decides he'll be taking the reins from Santa Claus and convinces his frightening friends to help him. The town's residents include monsters, ghosts, goblins and vampires, but it's Skellington's rag-doll love interest, Sally, and a gambling boogeyman, Oogie, who pose a threat to the town's transformation. Christmas is more frightening than a regifted fruitcake Dec. 20-21 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Coryn Doncaster

Reviews by Sean Burns

12 YEARS A SLAVE ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big, honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

20 FEET FROM STARDOM ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

ALL IS LOST ★★★★ Breathtaking in its simplicity, this riveting tale of survival at sea stars Robert Redford, a leaky boat...and that's pretty much that. Conveniently rebuking the banal Screenwriting 101 character notes and clunky symbolism that dragged Gravity down to Earth, writer-director J.C. Chandor's sophomore effort stars Redford as a nameless sailor, alone on the Indian Ocean when his yacht is struck by a stray storage container. What follows is wordless problem-solving with endless resourcefulness, as things rapidly proceed from bad to worse. The 77-year-old Sundance kid delivers a performance of expert physicality, devoid of dialogue save for a couple of SOS calls and one marvelously cathartic expletive. Redford brings his five decades of stardom to the fore. He's so magnetic, yet at times shockingly frail, you can't take your eyes off him. Chandor's unfussy direction remains focused on the tasks at hand, allowing viewers space to forge their own allegorical interpretations. Alternating between white-knuckle suspense and ghostly contemplation, All Is Lost is a spellbinding exercise in pure cinema. (At West Newton.)

AMERICAN HUSTLE ★ ½ A gaudy spectacle of egregious overacting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is the year's biggest embarrassment. Christian Bale hems, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. (At Coolidge Corner, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

BLUE IS THE WARMEST COLOR ★★★★ First love's seismic qualities have seldom been captured with such immersive abandon as in Abdellatif Kechiche's Cannes Film Festival Palme D'Or winner, a 179-minute sprawl of heartbreak shot on a vast, widescreen panorama that scarcely strays six inches from a young woman's face. Blue Is the Warmest Color charts the ardent sexual awakening and eventual crushing despair of Adèle (Adèle Exarchopoulos). She's a book-smart working-class teenager who can already tell things aren't clicking with her boyfriend, when one day she's gobsmacked by the sight of butch, blue-haired Emma (Léa Seydoux). What follows is a rapturous exploration, rendered in giddy, almost impossibly shallow-focus close-ups that make the rest of the world go away, plus a few superheroic sex scenes. Exarchopoulos' performance is something of a miracle, with every raw, unfiltered feeling rippling across that yearning, expressive face. Kechiche's camera never flinches, filming a fairly familiar coming-of-age tale as if through a microscope, the proximity pumping up emotions to a point where everything feels like it's happening for the very first time. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Captain Phillips ★★★ 1/2 In April 2009, the cargo freighter Maersk Alabama was hijacked by four Somali pirates. Unable to control the ship, they fled in a lifeboat, holding Capt. Richard Phillips for ransom. Before reaching shore, a team of Navy SEALs put an abrupt end to the hostage negotiations. Director Paul Greengrass' harrowing, bluntly titled Captain Phillips is a tricky picture with a lot on its mind, at times both pulse-pounding and deeply mournful. It reminded me of Zero Dark Thirty in the way it rewires action-movie conventions to remove any trace of triumphalism, and manages to keep you on the edge of your seat even though everybody already knows the ending. The final scenes are overpowering, with Greengrass mercilessly tightening the suspense screws as Tom Hanks fearlessly goes to emotional places we've never seen in his entire career. It's a brutal knockout of an ending, bold enough to leave you with the nagging impression that good hasn't conquered evil so much as a few mosquitoes have been swatted. This film sticks in your gut. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Dallas Buyers Club ★★★ 1/2 In the most miraculous career resurrection not precipitated by Quentin Tarantino, Matthew McConaughey has abruptly transformed himself from shirtless rom-com himbo to an expertly sleazy, electrifying screen presence. These days he's exuding an infectiously naughty sense of self-delight that serves him well in director Jean-Marc Vallée's somewhat schematic and a bit too crowd-pleasing take on the early days of the AIDS crisis. McConaughey, starved to an alarming fraction of his body weight, stars as a hard-partying boy diagnosed with HIV and given 30 days to live. Never one to follow protocol, he starts out buying stolen AZT from crooked hospital orderlies in parking lots and eventually ends up smuggling unapproved drugs across all sorts of borders in a variety of silly costumes as part of a rather ingenious entrepreneurial gambit. Craig Borten and Melisa Wallack's screenplay follows the template of every Bill Murray slobs vs. snobs comedy from the 1980s, except this time people are dying. Dallas Buyers Club is sometimes terribly overwritten yet always admirably underplayed. And McConaughey is just heroic. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Ender's Game ★★ The seminal 1985 science-fiction novel by renowned loudmouth bigot Orson Scott Card gets a dutiful big-screen blow-up from director Gavin Hood, who previously helmed that unwatchable first Wolverine movie. This is a sterile-looking vessel for overlong expository sequences, detailing a future world in which Earth has been attacked by angry alien arachnids and mankind's last hope for interstellar battle is an army of children, because they're better at video games or something. Hugo's Asa Butterfield stars as the brilliant prodigy molded into a baby sociopath by Harrison Ford's gruff Captain Graff. Ford and Viola Davis discuss the themes of the novel at great length, in case you need to write a paper on it for homework, while Butterfield and True Grit's Hailee Steinfeld play a lot of zero-gravity laser tag as practice. For those unfamiliar with Card's story, there's a jaw-dropping "I can't believe they went there" twist at the end that's such a thoughtful provocation it's almost worth sitting through all this dross to get there. Almost. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Enough Said ★★★½ A bittersweet farewell to the great James Gandolfini, this romance from writer-director Nicole Holofcener is funny, sad and wise about the crazy ways we torment ourselves in this thing called love. But unlike most synthetic rom-coms, Enough Said is uniquely attuned to the weary rhythms of middle age—it's about the surprise of finding someone when you've already been around the block a few times. Julia Louis-Dreyfus stars as a pent-up bundle of nerves working as a masseuse in a swank Los Angeles neighborhood. Gandolfini is the slovenly hunk who steals her heart. He's a big, slightly sad guy who seems to have settled for his lot in life years ago, but he's now surprised and delighted by the sudden arrival of this neurotic mess. Their chemistry is magic. She's all sharp right angles; he's a round Barcalounger Buddha. Louis-Dreyfus and Gandolfini's first date is one of the most purely pleasurable sequences I've seen this year, with two jaded, cautious people lowering their defenses and feeling each other out. Just lovely. (At West Newton.)

Gravity ★★★ Alfonso Cuarón's first film since 2006's Children of Men is a technical astonishment, and it's easy to see why it's been five years in the making. Gravity is first and foremost a wonder to watch, demanding to be seen on the largest screen possible. As a technological milestone, Gravity is astounding. As a movie, it's pretty OK. Sandra Bullock and George Clooney star as astronauts stranded in space after a terrifying hailstorm of Russian satellite debris makes a mess of their mission. Gravity is for all intents and purposes a computer-animated movie, with actual photography of the actors' heads stuck in the middle of the most photo-realistic CGI that I have ever seen. But then about halfway through, Gravity decides it needs to be "about" something. Yet the thunderous banality of this screenplay cannot detract from the accomplishment of Cuarón's filmmaking. I've honestly never seen anything like it, the rootless camera so indifferent to the characters, inviting us to just dwell for a bit in the vast, airless emptiness of space. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Great Beauty ★★★★ A monumental act of hubris even more impressive for being pulled off so gloriously, director Paolo Sorrentino's dazzling fantasia serves as a sort-of sequel to Federico Fellini's La Dolce Vita, one of the greatest of all films. Sad-eyed Toni Servillo stars as Jep Gambardella, a one-time novelist and dapper darling of Rome's social scene who has drifted through the past four decades in a haze of beautiful women, extravagant luxury and killer parties. But Jep's 65th birthday has knocked our old hedonist for a loop, and suddenly the sweet life ain't what it used to be. Sorrentino appropriates Fellini's rambling, anecdotal structure and pet obsessions: plenty of curvy ladies, circuses and juxtapositions of the sacred with the profane. But The Great Beauty is more than mere homage. Filtered through the filmmaker's own specific sensibility, it's a richly symbolic meditation on mortality, aging and precious time wasted. Servillo's weary gaze carries in it an existential ache for all that might have been, and a sad acknowledgement that every party eventually must end. Bravo. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Her ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears onscreen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. (At Kendall Square.)

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★ 1/2 What a difference a director makes. When we last caught up with Katniss Everdeen, she was reluctantly killing kids in Seabiscuit helmer Gary Ross' aesthetically ugly, sloppily staged adaptation of Suzanne Collins' young-adult megaseller. One year and a few hundred million dollars later, this series has fallen into the hands of filmmaker Francis Lawrence, of I Am Legend and the underrated Constantine fame. Lawrence has an eye for striking visuals but has never found a script to match his talent. He doesn't find one here either, but Catching Fire is still a huge improvement over its predecessor in nearly every way. Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss is back, shouldering the burden of martyrdom in a future dystopia where the rich enlist the poor to kill each other off in televised spectacles. Pulpy melodrama continues apace, but this time around with lush, burnished images and a budget to match the ambition. It's quite engrossing until the movie abruptly stops midscene, teasing another sequel coming soon to a theater near you. Sigh, the perils of franchise maintenance. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Jackass Presents: Bad Grandpa ★★ 1/2 After taking a bow with 2010's gasp-inducing, oddly valedictory Jackass 3D, Johnny Knoxville and some of the boys behind the scenes are back with this feature-length adventure about Irving Zisman. Long a staple of their repertoire, this drunken, potty-mouthed old man is actually Knoxville under heavy prosthetics, horrifying innocent bystanders with his aberrant behavior. The stunts are inspired; less so is the storyline in which Zisman takes a road trip with his precocious grandson, played by a game Jackson Nicoll. I've always adored these Jackass shenanigans and the gang's surrealist spirit. At best they're a modern Three Stooges for dudes who drink during the day, but tethering them to a conventional narrative structure doesn't pay off. Sure, it's a blast to watch Knoxville soil himself, disrupt funerals and coax unsuspecting folks into committing crimes, but this sort of humor plays best as quick blackout sketches. Bad Grandpa feels kind of like watching an old porno, zoning out during the "plot" while you're waiting for the good stuff. (In the suburbs.)

Last Vegas ★★ 1/2 Seniors say the darndest things in director Jon Turtletaub's harmless, calculatedly crowd-pleasing entry in the crazy-old-coots genre. Michael Douglas, Robert De Niro, Morgan Freeman and Kevin Kline star as childhood friends in Sin City for one last bachelor party. Douglas' aging lothario aims to finally tie the knot with a bimbo half his age, much to the consternation of the teasing geezers in his entourage. Don't expect any Hangover-styled hijinks, as these four not-so-bad grandpas stroll through a few family-friendly, mildly amusing comic interludes largely predicated upon product placement and the gang's antiquated notions of Rat Pack cool. Douglas gamely sends up his spray-tanned vanity, making eyes at Mary Steenburgen's sassy lounge singer. Freeman busts some surprising moves on the dance floor, Kline shoulders the film's blessedly few Viagra jokes and De Niro acts a bit more alert than his late-career somnambulist standard. It's a cast of relaxed old pros with easy chemistry, all of whom seem to be having a great deal of fun. The feeling is almost mutual. (In the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★ 1/2 A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-conseiously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Exeept it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Out of the Furnace ★½ In synopsis it sounds like the stuff of great hicksploitation. Set deep within a recession-ravaged Rust Belt dystopia, Christian Bale stars as Russell Baze, the kind of strong-but-silent type who wears undershirts everywhere and carries the weight of the world on his strapping shoulders. His ne'er-do-well brother Rodney (Casey Affleck) is missing a couple of screws after being stop-lossed through four tours in Iraq. He's fallen into all sorts of mischief with a backwoods bare-knuckle brawling league run by Woody Harrelson's monstrous meth-head and a weary fixer played by Willem Dafoe. When Rodney goes missing, Russell sets out to make things right. Out of the Furnace is a simple redneck revenge story, but director Scott Cooper has no stomach for genre satisfactions. Bookended by Eddie Vedder warbling "Release" over the credits, it's a humorless, ponderously solemn dirge that all but chokes on its own oppressive aura of self-importance. The film seems determined to flatten itself out into a collection of mournful anti-climaxes, typified by Bale's stone-faced biblical suffering. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Secret Life of Walter Mitty ★★ Full of fortune-cookie wisdom about living your dreams, this years-in-the-making labor of love for director-star Ben Stiller undercuts the pious sermons with so much product placement I kept reaching for the remote to try to fast-forward through the commercials. Unfortunately, you can't do that in a movie theater. Stiller plays a sad-sack everyman on the verge of losing his job at Life magazine after misplacing a cover photo by a legendary war correspondent. For reasons that don't make much sense, Stiller ends up running all over Greenland, Iceland and Afghanistan and learning how to become a better person or something. The movie is beautifully photographed, well-directed and utterly inane. It's difficult to build momentum when characters won't stop shilling for eHarmony and Papa John's, and the film bottoms out when Patton Oswalt drops by to extol the virtues of Cinnabon. I also had a hard time sitting still for a condescending lecture about risk-taking from Stiller, Hollywood royalty who never had to get a job. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Thor: The Dark World ★½ At least 60 percent of Thor: The Dark World consists of characters frantically running around trying to explain the plot to each other, hurling monster-sized gobs of exposition regarding the increasingly arbitrary rules of this fantasy universe. Everything works until it doesn't. And then it does again. You can do something until you can't anymore, but then later you can again. Some people die and stay dead. Others get to come back, if they're popular enough with test-screening audiences. Eventually, I threw up my hands, accepting that literally anything could happen at any given moment. As the cast wallows in tedious mythological explaining in front of kitschy CGI backdrops, you realize this has more in common with the Star Wars prequels than just Natalie Portman. The semi-apocalyptic claptrap is rendered almost unwatchably murky by yet another cheap 3-D post-conversion, but the only moments that linger in the memory are throwaway human gestures like Chris Hemsworth's Thor hanging his hammer on a coat rack, or politely catching a ride on a crowded subway. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The

Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set-piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes dead ening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

COMEBACK KIDS After nearly two decades away from the stage, alt-rockers the Breeders are diving back into the spotlight with the lineup that gained them fame. Fronted by the Pixies' Kim Deal, the band toured with Nirvana, headlined Lollapalooza and went platinum with their sophomore album, Last Splash. A number of member shakeups and hiatuses followed, but the Last Splash lineup is back making waves once again, with a world tour in support of the just-released 20th anniversary edition of that album, LSXX, complete with reworked demos and live tunes. Plunge into the best of the '90s on Dec. 18 at the Paradise Rock Club. Hannah Weintraub

STEEL TRAPPED

LaToya Ruby Frazier got down to business when business was down in her hometown. Hoping to highlight the downside of globalization, Frazier started taking photographs as a teenager in Braddock, Pa., where the closure of steel mills had decimated the community. In Witness, she traces the trajectory of her blighted town through black-and-white photographs of her late grandmother, her mother and herself — three generations who saw different sides of Braddock over the decades, but who all felt the effects of environmental and social toxicity. Bear witness at the ICA through March 2. Hannah Brown

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makem, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a well-known member of an Irish rock group [illegible]

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617 731 8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

WHO KNEW? MARCO POLO BROUGHT SPAGHETTI BACK FROM CHINA

The State Room was transformed into a multicultural rainbow of saris, kimonos, salwar kameez, cheongsams and every other form of traditional Asian dress when the Asian Task Force Against Domestic Violence held its Silk Road Gala.

Spotted noshing on food by celebrity chefs Ming Tsai, Jody Adams and Asia Mei (to name only a few) were such personages and panjandrums as BJ's head honcha Laura Sen, former first lady of Massachusetts Susan Weld, the indescribably beautiful Audrey Pack, pretty-in-pearls Kija Kim, the dapper George Donnelly squiring the stunning Sarah Kim, bow-tied hipster George Turnbull, the smashing Sansan Lee, the flawless Atsuko Toko Fish and her banking bigwig husband, Larry Fish, and the diminutive emcee for the evening, Janet Wu, whose handmade top was a costume from the Beijing Opera that the company sold when it was short on money during a U.S. tour.

Needless to say, the evening was pretty much perfect, with cocktails followed by the chefs fattening everyone up, which prompted one guest to observe, "Pasta? Tres's not Asian... Although I do know of a good pasta joint in Shanghai."

A DIFFERENT QUEST ANGLE

How many party pants can you fit into the ballroom of the InterContinental Boston?

Apparently a lot, because the Children's Hospital League's annual gala lived up to its name: A Night of Sweet Dreams and Silver Linings.

All the bright young things were there, among them: blonde bombshell Elena Matlack and the alarmingly tall Tom, the breathtakingly beautiful Margaret McNeill, handsome devil Alex Peselman and the drop-dead gorgeous Diana, the extremely lucky Richard Snyder with his movie-star gorgeous wife, Aris, salt-and-pepper fox Evan Kushner, latter-day Louise Brooks Penny Fireman and the ever-affable Dan, co-chairs Nicole Clark and Marci Katz, the soignée Sarah Svenson, costumer extraordinaire Lynne Smith and her loving hubby, Gary, the luscious Kat VanDernoot, and so on and so forth.

One sign that the party was destined to go into overdrive: The dance floor was crowded before anyone had sat down to dinner, while the tables were decorated with giant martini glasses filled with Hershey's Kisses. Meanwhile, members of the hospital's Clown Care Unit gave the proceedings a Ringling Brothers-meets-Armani vibe.

The evening's best exchange: One man said, "These mirrored tables make me nostalgic for the days when I did coke." To which his friend responded, "I never understood why you'd want to watch yourself get high."

FOOD, GLORIOUS FOOD

The most aptly named fundraiser on the city's social calendar is Food for Thought, the annual dinner party to benefit the Grow Clinic at Boston Medical Center.

Held at the Mandarin Oriental, the intriguing crowd included the likes of redheaded babe Lauren Joy, eminence grise Don Rodman, the Karger twins, Paul and Wes, with their stunning other halves, Pamela Vargas and Ashley Bickford, perfection personified Mary Wolfson, incorrigible scamp Mark Andrus, unfairly good-looking couple Pam and Richard Remis, ambassador Alan Solomont and the stunning Susan, arts consultant Martha Jones, Grow Clinic founder Dr. Deborah Frank, mistress of fabulousness Heather Unruh, the entire Cutler and Belkin clans, and equally delightful others, all there to honor chefs Lydia Shire, Gordon Hamersley and Jody Adams.

As always, the evening was eye-opening and raised beaucoup bucks to help feed undernourished kids, with the added bonus that, as per usual, the dinner and wines were superb.

As one attendee put it: "If I could cook like this, I might not be so good at making reservations." ◆
